BpnJ - I may be a generational thing . . .

When I had a job and was working from 1965 to 1997 the vast majority of African-Americans that I worked for, with, and supervised all had a better command of the English Language then I did. They was a grew up in a time when their Parents, Families and Churches all reinforce one message : "In Order To Compete With The White Man You Have To Be Better That The White Man." and all to often they were.

That was from the 1940s/50s "Acting White"
To Be American Acculturation of the 'Negro'*.

* 1950s 'Negro' was the nice politic socially acceptable word that good White people used

-versus- The-N-Word : Black wasn't 'In' and African-American had not been invented yet . . .

That Acculturation was disregarded and looked down on as "acting White {being a Racial Sell-Out} by the 1980s/90s. Now for many in the inner-cities the African-American 'Culture' is anything "That Ain't White". Too many of todays young African-Americans proper English is Whitey Talk.

They use 240 volt bulbs at some traffic crossings. It's a 120 V supply. They do last forever. I once read somewhere that the life doubles for every 7 percent reduction in voltage.

That would make sense. The heat produced would be the square of the voltage change, hence 49 percent lower with a 7 percent voltage reduction.

I note with some concern that even the Boat People have a better command of the language than you. Were you cheated out of a good education or did the Post Office kill the cognitive processes?

- That is very strange! I always thought modern

At least the old Clocks with a Round Face

Yeah AC-to-DC
DC-to-Time Source

Time Source-to-Numeric Display[DC]

Strange Indeed : This happen about 4-Years ago in a new room addition.

First bought a 'new' Digital Clock and plugged it in the new room. Within a week or two I noticed it was almost an Hour ahead.

Swapped It Out with another Good Right-On-Time Clock [Years of Being On-Time] from another room.

New Clock Worked A-OK in the other room; and the Old Clock started to run fast in the new room.

Checked the AC Volts several times N&D 125~130 and Checked the AC Hertz *On 60 Hz

Tried the Swap-out thing another time; with the same 'strange' results.

Went out an bought a Battery Powered Wall Clock Octagon Face and 3-Hands and the Time has been A-OK ever since. -knock-on-wood-

Oops as a matter of fact I do not think that I have replace the battery in that Clock since I hung it on the Wall around . . . -add-to-to-do-list-

Note the same Power Plug powers a LCD TV, DVD Player and Radio al of which have always worked A-OK.

They do. If the line frequency is stable.

I had a similar problem with SWEPCo when I was in Texas. The studio clocks drifted by as much as 10 seconds either way every hour because the line frequency drifted.

Burr actually believes a list that says Pakistan is -less- corrupt than the US???

Bwahahahahaha

But then, those "tea-baggers" always were a little naive and gullible...nice, well meaning people, but gullible. :-(

Sure... it's obvious he's a publicity-seeking fool.

Yes, we have "freedom of speech"...but that freedom does NOT allow you to shout "fire" in a theater when there is no fire. Same difference with the fool from Florida, starting riots and protests and putting our troops at risk.

Hey, maybe on the anniversary of the Oklahoma Federal Building bombing, he should burn Bibles...because McVeigh was a Christian. Same difference, right?

- Tropical station?

One of the Time References in this last one was : Tres Treinta -t- 3 & 30 @ 3:30 AM PDT which was my local time. -So- it was most likely a Mexican Station in Western Mexico or may be some one right here in California.

- Do you hear a lot of fishing boats?
- That's what I hear at random places.
- Mexican fishermen. They just use
- any blank spot on the dial they want to.

Dave have no idea as to : Who They Are . . .
-or- Where They Are . . .

It is not normal comms between Fishing Boats Truck Dispatchers; Amateur Net-Controllers or even CBers.

Mostly they seem to use the Phonetic Alphabet http://www.dynamoo.com/technical/phonetic.htm with a Spanish Accent and Spanish Numbers.

They use Code Names like "Papa Charley" versus a Ships Name or a Ship's Captain's Name; or even a Nick Name and Ship "Big Mike on the West Wind"
* No Lat & Long
* No Sea Weather
* No Call Signs or other IDs

They do seem to use USB in the Lower Bands versus LSB like the Amateurs/Hams; and vice-versa on the upper bands.

Unless I write it down I really don't recall any of it cause it is in Spanish : So a name like "Papa Charley" that is repeated many times is written down with the time but the rest is just so much noise that does not stick in the ear.

Used to know a guy in the East Bay that ran comms between his home and Central America for Visitors by Appointment; so that they could Talk to their Families back home in the 1960s/70s.

Now with Cellphones and low cost Calling Cards
I don't think anyone needs to do that anymore.

Those comparisons are interesting, and there's some truth in them.

But it's a huge simplification to say that 96 kbps "is equal to FM radio." FM radio has drawbacks and artifacts, and so does a 96 kbps mp3 or AAC stream. Maybe they're roughly the same level of degradation to most people's ears, but each has a very different sort of degradation.

Some people object more to the odd added "details" and phasing/intermodulation anomalies of compressed digital than to the increased hiss and (pre-emphasis related) reduction in high-end levels of FM. And some feel the opposite.

And Dave is right. A compressed-data signal that sounds quite acceptable in the car, or on speakers in a noisy home, can sound _much_ worse on headphones or in a pristine, silent listening environment, where its subtle details can be heard.

At 260 or 320 kbps, I'm very happy with stereo mp3s, even on headphones. At 128 kbps, headphones and my best speakers reveal some occasionally annoying flaws.

With every good wish,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

Sounds good to me Joe. the last guy, I can remember burning books, that wasn't a so called christian, had a crappy bunch of hair under his nose too. but, his first name was Adolf. Jim, sorry, i mean Terry Jones was bounced of of another country, for putting his hand in the basket. but, that's why they call it the god biz. no one knows how much money was put in the basket last Sunday.

I picked up a used SE-3 Sherwood for my 340. i hooked it up to my 30CC, and it's still there. the Sherwood made a fun, simple receiver, a lot more fun to play with. the Palstar is a super receiver for the price. had mine about 6 or 7 years now. never missed a beat. and Paul is a super guy.

True. The fake stereo does the latter, the SBR guesses the treble at the hint of a few bits available to steer it.

I should mention, the Palstar is sold in Europe under the Lowe 350 badge. just an FYI, if you didn't know.

I have done blind A/B testing. WAV or FLAC always beats AAC, at any bitrate. AAC+ SBR, the flavor used for digital radio, is even more annoying due to false triggering of the pink noise pumper and the total lack of any sense of space. A typical 78 RPM analog record has more ambience.

I do all my entertainment radiolistening via web unless I'm somewhere without wireless broadband or listening to the AM radio. I find the vast majority of FM radio stations unlistenable due to the extreme dynamics processing.

Can you get an inverter to lock to an external time reference. Quartz crystals wander all over the place. I use atomic clocks almost exclusively.

But over an extended period of time a synchronous clock in the USA will not gain nor lose any time. The power plants speed up under light load and slow down under stress, but they average 60 Hz precisely over the long term. Specifically to keep old school clocks accurate.

Less civilized places don't bother.

Well, I did not write that - but all things being equal, I think he's right. Pakistan is a wreck, as are most 3rd world nations. Latin American nations' governments practically define the word corruption - and I know lots of folks from Brazil and Central America who will give you an earful. They love the U.S. for its far better and less corrupt government.

Have you tried other lossless codecs like Monkey, mp3-HD, Mp4 ALS?

The one that seems most promising is mp3-HD as it's compatible with older players. I've heard some weird stuff with Money, but it may be me. ALS sounds solid, but I think you need a player that can handle it.

I think Vorbis has a lossless system as well, but I could be wrong.

3532. Radio St Helena Day 2010 CANCELLED

Radio St. Helena sincerely regrets to have to inform radio listeners everywhere that

>> Radio St. Helena Day 2010 has been cancelled << .

This very difficult decision was necessary, due to severe technical problems with the shortwave antenna tower. RSH is quite confident that RSD will be able to continue in 2011.

Multi-millionaire New York Mets baseball players Carlos Beltran (Puerto Rican), Oliver Perez (Mexican) and Luis Castillo (Dominican) refused to participate in team's visit to wounded American servicemen and women at Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, D.C. during the Met's recent series versus the Washington Nationals.

Apparently the 3 Latino "brothers" couldn't be bothered to spend an hour or two brightening the days of Americans confined in hospital wards who've had their legs blown off etc.

The three jocks contracts are: $119 million for Carlos Beltran, $30 million for Oliver Perez and $25 million for Luis Castillo.

That reminds me of a joke:

A 500 pound black welfare sow is in the supermarket checkout line with her 11 kids (all boys) in tow, when she realizes she forgot to get grape drink. She yells "Leroy, goan gimme sum dat grape drank!". All 11 boys head towards the beverage aisle. The cashier says "My, they sure are anxious to help out, aren't they?". The sow says "Not reellah, dey all go cuz dey ALL be named Leroy". The cashier says "Well how on earth do you avoid confusion when you want to address only one of them?". The sow says "Oh dat easy, ah jes call dem by dey daddy's last name."

Liberty Net: September 4, 2010

http://3950.net/2010/09/liberty-net-september-4-2010/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

SUNSPOT NUMBERS are inching up and so are radio conditions ï¿½ and so is the number of check-ins to amateur radioï¿½s Liberty Net. Net Control Station W1WCR presided over an excellent session this week, which included a lot of focus on personal liberty versus the growing police state here in the USSA.

Hereï¿½s a tiny sampling selected from the many items discussed this week on amateur radioï¿½s best discussion net:

ï¿½ Was the major bank failure in Afghanistan the result of that country being forced to adopt the most corrupt and criminal banking system in the world ï¿½ that of the United States? (7 minutes)

ï¿½ As the regime in Washington prepares to sell its shares in General Motors to citizens and Wall Street vultures alike, why is no one considering the option of returning the shares or the money to the taxpayers who actually paid for them? (9 minutes)

ï¿½ Are New Jersey state troopers now using facial recognition software to compare your face to your license photograph? ï¿½ or to match your face with databases of supposed ï¿½terroristsï¿½? (20 minutes)

ï¿½ Is there a new class ï¿½ and even a new physical type: no neck, unintelligent, shaved head, steroidal, unquestioningly obedient ï¿½ emerging in America as ï¿½law enforcementï¿½ agencies multiply and gain quasi-military power? (35 minutes)

ï¿½ Police are now using special parabolic microphones ï¿½ developed for the power company to find line faults ï¿½ to spy on conversations in private cars and homes. (50 minutes)

ï¿½ Iï¿½m not sure whether itï¿½s either cosmic irony or karma, but both the Black mayor of Detroit and Jesse Jackson recently had their tricked-out SUVs stripped and vandalized by street thieves in that anti-Athens of the north. (1 hour 17 minutes)

ï¿½ One must not underestimate the potential power of Islam as it colonizes the West ï¿½ with explosive Muslim birthrates, and with White birthrates below replacement levels both here and in Europe, we will be easily conquered via the bedroom. (1 hour 27 minutes)

ï¿½ The fundamentalists who believe that Israel is central to ï¿½Bible prophecyï¿½ and that Israel is somehow ï¿½holyï¿½ are quite insane, but they are catï¿½s paws in a very serious ploy to harness us to the wars of the Jewish state. (1 hour 54 minutes)

ï¿½ The Chinese are racial realists ï¿½ they placed strict controls on Black exchange students, forbidding them to have close contact with Chinese women, for example ï¿½ and they simply do not respect a nation that could elect a creature like Barack Obama as president. (2 hours 2 minutes)

ï¿½ There is a tremendous amount of justified anger among Black women, who are angry about losing their men to women of other races. (2 hours 5 minutes)

Remember that you can receive the Liberty Net on the nearest clear frequency to 3950 kHz every Saturday night at 10PM Eastern Time ï¿½ or listen live on the Internet via N2SAG or N2IRJ. And you can listen at your leisure via the mp3 files posted here at http://3950.net every week. Each Saturday nightï¿½s mp3 file is usually posted on Sunday and will be visible in the upper right column of this site.

Once again, thanks to W1WCR for running this important and historic discussion net, and thanks also to N2IRJ for making these recordings available.

I have NEVER noticed money to improve genetics, nor that poverty degrades them. Having said that, generations of being stuck in poverty does have very negative results on the victims. But, stoopid-arse which can't even lean to speak English will always be one, in rags or in riches ... money can't even improve looks, however it can purchase a lot of plastic surgery!

If you mean "radical racial minorities" as compared to red necks, I have no use for either ... for example, here in California, I consider homosexual, the majority, to be a radical minority--and, that only or mainly speaks to the get-in-your-face, equal-marriage-rights idiots.

You do realize that most radio stations are using compressed digital formats for their programming, and have for some time. I believe the most prevalent is OGG/Vorbis, though some do use WAV or high bitrate mp3. "DJ's" anymore sit in front of a computer monitor and read off a list prepared by the PM or equivalent. Lucky ones even get to point and click on the tracks they want to play. Union shops are insane: all the "DJ" does is talk, the board is run by an engineer and all music selection is done by the PM. In some stations, the entire broadcast day is lined out in advance, and the FCC log is printed out at the beginning of the day. I miss the old days of radio.

That is how we began the slide that ended us up here in the sewer. We began comparing ourselves to other nations, the American standard of living went in the toilet, and I began to see my first homeless people--sometime in the late 70's or early 80's. Now, in California, it is pretty safe to bet if you see a bridge, someone sleeps under it at night ... sad, so very, very sad ... still to this very day I will hear someone say our homeless are "much better off than such-and-such a countries." Actually, I am much more worried about the loss performance of the balun on the received signal, than on transmitted. If I burn up 50% of my transmitter power in the balun/match, I only lower the signal, the guy on the other end is receiving, by 25% ... I can tolerate a very bad balun here, usually!

On my receiver, fractions of a micro-volt can turn a bad signal into a good one ... I always check double check any balun with a receiver ...

That may be why everyone says HD Radio sound so good. Maybe it actually only sounds good because the "analog" broadcast is really no such thing.
I've never listened to HD on a home system with a high end amplifier and speakers, only in a vehicle where it's so much better than analog FM that the reaction I get from the spousal unit when we're on an HD station is "is that a CD you're playing?"

I hear when your soles get to thin you can line the inside of your

As productivity continues to rise, humans continue to be born at an idiotic rate of reproduction, and the number of jobs of any type continue not to increase, you can bet your boots that you'll see a lot MORE homeless people. Better get used to it.

California has them, BTW, because the winters are survivable here.
Hard to make a cardboard box warm in Minneapolis in February.

I am in my late 50's. Back, when I was in 7th grade, we used to get a little school paper, once a week. I think it was called, "Weekly Reader." One issue, asked the question as machines take over all the jobs, the production of food, etc. what will the people do. I remember having a classroom discussion, we ventured they would become writers, poets, actors, space explorers, adventurers, athletes, etc. Yes, we decided there would be plenty for people to do. We envisioned supermarkets where you simply went in and picked out what you needed and went on your merry way, at first there would be hording but as people got used to the idea and the change that would end. We talked about "special benefits" given to the workers who kept the machines repaired ...

Well, we stand on the verge of having this come to fruition, today, perhaps in my lifetime. What keeps it from happening? Greed, corruption, the wish of some to have control over others, the enjoyment some get out of watching others suffer, the desire of some to own slaves, etc. ... all the things nasty people do ... the public servants we are sticking into office are not fit to aid us in this transition time. The people in power are power/money freaks; That is why they got into power in the first place.

When we are done with the chinese cheap labor/manufacturing/goods, when we are done with the illegal aliens serving as the riches slaves, this is where we will stand. There will be no more jobs, there will be no more need for them other than to repair the machines, jobs will be VERY limited. And then, we will finally have machines which repair the machines ... the times will be most dangerous then. As it will be time to have an even and fair distribution of property and wealth.

I leave it to you to decide who won't like that happening and the lengths they will go to, to keep their slaves, power, ability to cause pain and suffering on others, etc. ... and think about the type of public servants you will want in your offices at that time.

Regards,
JS

It's rare, now, that line frequency is that unstable. Here in Illinois, it's pretty much on target most of the time. Some variation occasionally. But for the most part, by the end of the day, it's made up, and clocks are on the mark.

But 20 years ago, there was a lot of variation.

possibly it's Takin since he resides in the UK. The trolls are quite How right you are.

Back when AM was king and AM stations had REAL PROGRAMS, locally-produced, not sent down the line from a studio in god-only-knows where with canned music. And back before the days of "talk radio." I don't know when was the last time I even tuned to the AM band.

And now, the FM bands are being invaded by wackjobs -- half the FM stations in my area are "christian" radio and the rightwing hate jocks are invading FM territory.

On the other hand, I recently discovered Sirius satellite radio where I can listen to the Willie Nelson channel 24/7 for real music.

Leaving aside the huge questions of who gets to decide such things in Utopia or why anyone has the right to decide them at all, and also leaving aside my weariness with empty ideologies that are based on "who gets the money and stuff," I am very curious about one thing.

I'd like to know why you assume that "even" distribution and "fair" distribution would the same thing, or even compatible.

Isn't it just as likely that they would be mutually exclusive?

With all good wishes,

It's very unlikely that modern broadcast facilities are using AC-synchronous clocks. The delay you notice is probably due to satellite network delays, talk radio delay devices, and the like.

If there is any difference at all between the different lossless formats then someone is lying and they're not really lossless.

I'd be very surprised if a lossless version of MP3 could be made compatible with all old MP3 players.
For one thing lossless audio files are big and there's no guarantee that an old player can read data from its memory fast enough. But I'm doubtful it can really be done at all. They may be able to create an improved high bit rate MP3 that they think they can get away with calling lossless when it isn't.

There has been "talk radio" all my life, but it was much more limited and had a better, more balanced sort of talk. My personal favorite was Ira Blue on KGO, second I guess was Herb Jepko on KSL. KSL only had talk at night, I think KGO had it 24/7, or close to it, they used to bill themselves as "People to People Radio 81."

I believe he was being facetious.

Due to the large amount of satellite delivered programming, much of it automated, the bulk of modern stations' clocks are sync'ed to a satellite delivered time standard. The most delay you're going to see there, is a second or two. If the station is a mix of automated/live, and it's a talk station, you'll see an additional 8 seconds or so of delay.

But there will be significant consistency. Otherwise they wouldn't be able to meet network feeds on time.

The last station I worked using an AC synchronous clock was in Louisiana during the mid-80's. Also SWEPCo. There was still some swing, but less than a second or two an hour.

Everything since has been sync'ed to a satellite delivered network clock.

60 Hz fluctuations at the telephone company would be unusual -- because they don't use 60 Hz for a time standard.

I can't speak for the cell phone industry, but here in the Great Midwest
10 or 12 years ago, all the land line telco central offices installed GPS receivers. No, not to find out where they were, but to derive very accurate timing from the GPS satellites. Although I can't yet state that for sure, I would think the cellular offices use a similar GPS timing scheme.

I don't know what is causing the variation in time you are seeing, but you can take it to the bank that 60 Hz has NOTHING to do with it.

Interesting thought, but the reason they used the left hand threads was to keep the knuckle draggers from stealing the bulbs. So, presumably (and hopefully), not too many bulbs found their way "home". :-)

Sad but true. With millions of homes already in foreclosure and millions more waiting in the wings to be foreclosed, available living space under the viaducts is going to become pretty scarce. :-(

Lots of DX stations on the air in the amateur bands. Good propagation on 20 meters. Contacted a station at about 1300UT I thought was in Germany - DU1 prefix and a good signal - Then I looked him up on QRZ. He was in Quezon City in the Phillipines. Everyone else must have thought the same thing because there were very few people calling him.

That point plays well into the movement by the NAB to get FM (and possible AM) radio chips incorporated into ever cell phone.

Seems redundant, if streaming is the way of the future. Why worry about terrestrial reception on the same device? Unless you're worried that terrestrial reception will simply pass in to nostalgia.

I've dated three women, now, in the last decade, who did not have a radio in the house, and did not listen to the radio in the car, in favor of iPod or CD's. They did their 'radio listening' on-line, or with their cell phones or iPod touch.

Their kids didn't use-over-the-air radio at all. And one, who was just entering Middle School, had never used a radio.

In 10 years, the options to terrestrial radio will be so broad, and so widely available, that terrestrial reception may, indeed, be irrelevant to acquiring the desired content.

One auto maker has put a TiVo-like device in their audio system so that drivers can pause, rewind and replay live radio as they do TV at home. This system also allows time shifting of content, albeit on a limited scale. Rendering the over-the-air experience so similar to alternate delivery methods that it need not occupy any top-of-mind.

So, while your point is well made that alternate streams cannot reach everyone, nor do so cost free, the cost issue may not be sufficiently relevant to deter a migration from OTA to stream. And, while the number of locations where streaming is not available is currently high, that's changing. In a decade, there may be nowhere that a cell phone won't connect.

Thank you all!

Your answers convinced me that resistances were too off from normal.

I decided to pop the MLB open, and there's what I found:
- case is made with two pipe-end caps and a pipe section completely hidden between them
- caps are glued together only where they meet, and "top" cap slightly glued to top end of pipe section
- no glue on the much broader facing surfaces of pipe and the upper cap
- "bottom" cap is solidly resin glued to the internal pipe and the two can't be separated
- top cap pops off rather easily by sticking a flat screwdriver where the caps meet, with moderate damage
- bottom cap, where the SO239 is, is potted in resin and you can't free the socket without destroying everything
- the top cap, where the wire tie-post is, has a small hole in which the stainless steel is bolted and sealed with what looked like a thin veil of resin
- the tie-post screw with nuts counter-nuts, multiple washers, can be completely freed
- as expected, there was a small RF autotransformer potted in a resin-filled plastic cylinder approximately 20mm dia. x 15mm lenght
- the RF transformer shows extremely low and normal resistance
- all excess resistance was due to bad contacts
--- between components of top bolt
--- between large washer and body of SO239
- I could easily clean up the top bolt
- I could not do the same to the potted bottom contacts.

To fix the bottom contact I resorted to a work-or-bust trick: massive DC! I slammed DC from a variety of low voltage power supplies, and resistance quickly but gradually decreased while the whole socket warmed up. I reached the peak of about 15A at which my most powerful PS trips sensing short. At that point the potted contact had no measurable resistance, stopped heating, and reliably tripped the PSU short protection.

I think there might have been moisture leaking in, and the overcurrent must have burned out whatever corrosion results there where. I scratched the resin and resealed the contact, left the whole thing out in the ambient humidity, and after a couple of weeks resistance is still nil.

I'll now bolt and glue it together and ad some more external weatherproofing. Not perfect, but should hold up. So all things considered, I'd say that a constipated RF Systems Magnetic Longwire Balun with an intact transformer is repairable.

If it does not hold up and resistance rises again (hopefully in another 15 years or so, I can recover the transformer and change the whole outer can and SO239.

If all else this fails, and you wish to reclaim the potted core, grab a pint of methylene chloride based paint remover. Soak the potted assembly in a small amount in a small glass container. The resin should fall off after a couple/few hours, unwinding, a bit of brushing and a rinse should leave you with clean core. Count the turns as you remove them and pay attention to the winding methods if you want to reconstruct exactly ...

"There are around 2,000 radio stations broadcasting digitally providing better audio quality among other nifty features!"

This looks like false advertising.

Like Fox News says, let's be fair and honest.

"Honest" Currently there are about 2000 stations broadcasting programming in HD!
And if you drive from Maine to California, you might actually hear most of them.

FAIR/HONEST:You will not hear all 2000 HD radio stations sitting in your driveway.
You might only hear 10.

Digitally providing better audio quality.

"Honest" The system uses a digital footprint to deliver audio.

FAIR/HONEST: The acceptable minim for digital compressed audio, known as MP3
is 128 KBPS. Compressed rich CD quality is closer to 192 KBPS.

HD radio streams 96 KBPS/ and broadcasters can split the signal so the listeners may only enjoy 48 KBPS.

"Honest" Improved quality is a personal perception or understanding.

FAIR/HONEST HD radio can deliver improved sound so long as the user remains stationary.
While being mobile, users will experience seconds of audio dropouts or silence. The radio will continually sync from HD to analog causing a noticeable and annoying difference in audio quality.
User will also notice an echo like effect while syncing.

Honest: Other nifty features.
Artist and album information is available.

FAIR/HONEST: RDS also provides the same content free on most standard FM radios.

Yes, yes, we know: and not only that, e-commerce will render all brick-and-mortar stores obsolete. Sell your Safeway stock, invest NOW in Webvan and get in on the ground floor!

My techno-hype meter just overloaded. Will digital technology _change_ broadcast radio? Certainly; it already is. Will it totally _obsolete_ it? Almost certainly not.

For one-to-many media, broadcast technologies have an inherent advantage over peer-to-peer ones, particularly for live streaming.
(Ever tried streaming a news broadcast on a big news day?).

The old days of radio were the best.For instance, the first radio station in Mississippi was shut down/off, because that woman radio show host used some cuss words on the air.
I don't see anything wrong with that, it was wrong to shut that radio station down/off.

Yep, and so today in 2010 there more lawyers who need work. So, when you make claims like there are around 2,000 radio stations broadcasting digitally, you also must say " example based on total stations broadcasting. You may not receive all stations.

I.e. Coffee maybe hot, please consume with caution.
Pan will get hot use with caution.
Discard wrapper before consuming, caution will be hot..

Just to be safe, otherwise it looks you're advertising false claims.. :-)

here are the three 3 phases of conservative decay.
1.conservatism(policies always fail)
2. libertarianism(the drive for purity, the conservative polices and those that implemented them, were not pure enough)
3. fascism(the rise of the strong man to ensure purity, the strongman will drive out the impure, liberals, jews, immigrants, trade unionists, communists, socialists, those mental and physical defects, gypsies, etc. this to fails on a huge scale. just look what happened to the central european fascists. they collapsed their economies, and came up millions of workers and soldiers short.

because conservatism is a form of mental illness. its based on greed, hatred, bigotry, racism, envy, and selfishness to the extreme. once you allow a society to be based on those values, you are finished. it happens to every great society, the forces of extremism(conservatism)bleed the society dry till it can no longer function, then others step in to take over whats left, and the society disappears.
the conservative can turn out reams and reams of meaningless factless baseless papers extorting the values and virtues of all of the above.
and the gullible sop it up, but, the path downward does not alter, it picks up steam.
leadership becomes almost a joke, as the conservative hammers away at society in their never ending quest for more. the society becomes rudderless, as the conservative stretches their tentacles ever deeper into society. thus exacerbating the downward trajectory.
all policy decisions by then are for the benefit of the conservative.
the conservative fans the flames of collapse by deflecting all blame onto others. just as the nazis blamed all of Germany's problems on the liberals. the confused, gullible, and the stupid go along with the drive for ever more purity, even as the collapse intensifies.
so look for more of the same no matter who wins.

The most reliable barometer ever known for assessing what Republicans are really thinking and doing: look at what they're accusing their enemies of.
Jim

it is impossible for liberals to be fascists. fascists hate liberals, trade unionist, socialists, communists, jews(because most of them are liberal), the weak, the disabled, minorities, homosexuals. they are intolerant of other views and religions. they practice bigotry, racism, and homophobia, etc. say, i just described the modern conservative movement:)

Chapter 1: Financing the 1933 Elections
On the cold winter weekend of January 28, 1933, Germany was officially without a government. Chancellor Kurt von Schleicher and his cabinet had resigned on Saturday afternoon, and eighty-six-year-old President von Hindenburg had not yet appointed a new chancellor. A nervous tension spread over Berlin. Everyone waited for news; most felt Germany was at an historic turning point.
Who would be the next chancellor? Hitler - the leader of the largest party, the Nazis, who pledged to destroy democracy? Papen - the aristocratic horseman who had been chancellor before Schleicher, but who had no popular following? Perhaps Schleicher again, if he could persuade the Social Democrats, the second largest political party in the country, to join him in a coalition? Governing Germany in the middle of an economic depression with nine million unemployed was not an enviable task. The country had just had three different chancellors in rapid succession. By tradition, the leader of the largest party was usually appointed chancellor. But the Nazis had been the largest party for over a year, and so far intrigues and political maneuvering had succeeded in keeping Hitler out of power. Everyone guessed what a Hitler government would mean. He had not kept his militarism, anti-Semitism, and dictatorial ambitions a secret.
Political intrigues were so numerous that weekend that no one really knew what was going on. Sensational rumors were being spread throughout the city. Some said an army coup was imminent, that Schleicher and the generals were about to abduct President von Hindenburg and declare martial law. There were also rumors of an armed Nazi uprising and a general strike by the socialist workers.
Hitler and Hermann Goering, the second most powerful man in the Nazi party, stayed up all night on Sunday, January 29, trying to figure out what Hindenburg might do. It was not until after 10 A.M. on Monday that Hitler received a summons to the president's office. Even at that point, the Nazis were not certain whether Hitler would be appointed chancellor or Hindenburg would ask him to serve as vice-chancellor.

Across the street from the Chancellery, in the Kaiserhof Hotel, Hitler's lieutenants were waiting, unsure of what was going on. Goebbels, the Nazi propaganda chief, said:

In the street the crowd stands waiting between the Kaiserhof and the Chancellery. We are torn between doubt, hope, joy and despair. We have been deceived too often to be able, wholeheartedly, to believe in the great miracle. [S.A.] Chief of Staff Roehm stands at the window (with binoculars) watching the door of the Chancellery from which the Fuehrer [the leader, Hitler] must emerge. We shall be able to judge by his face if the interview was a success. Torturing hours of waiting.
At last, a car draws up in front of the entrance. The crowd cheers. They seem to feel that a great change is taking place....
A few moments later, he is with us. He says nothing. His eyes are full of tears. It has come! The Fuehrer is appointed Chancellor. He has already been sworn in by the President of the Reich. All of us are dumb with emotion. Everyone clasps the Fuehrer's hand....Outside the Kaiserhof, the masses are in a wild uproar....The thousands soon become tens of thousands. Endless streams of people flood the Wilhelmstrasse. We set to work...at once.
Hitler's victory was not a complete one by any means. He had been appointed chancellor in a coalition government. Papen was to be his vice-chancellor, and all the powerful cabinet posts were held by Papen's conservative allies, rather than the Nazis. But at the moment, Hitler's followers weren't worried about the details; for them the only thing that mattered was that Hitler was chancellor. They had come to power! All day, crowds gathered in the square outside the Kaiserhof Hotel and the Chancellery.
At dusk Nazi storm troopers in their brown uniforms gathered in the Tiergarten park, along with men of the Stahlhelm, an ultranationalistic veterans' organization, for a torchlight victory parade through the center of Berlin. As soon as it was dark, they came marching by the thousands through the Brandenburg Gate, carrying swastika flags and the black, white, and red flags of the German empire. Bands marched between the units, beating their big drums as the men sang old German military songs. But as each band came to the Pariser Platz, where the French embassy was located, they stopped whatever they were playing and, with an introductory roll of drums, broke into the tune of the challenging war song "Victorious We Will Crush the French."
The torches carried by the marchers glowed hypnotically in the darkness. To foreign witnesses, it was a frightening sight. "The river of fire flowed past the French Embassy," Ambassador François-Poncet wrote, "whence, with heavy heart and filled with foreboding, I watched this luminous wake." Liberal Germans found it an "ominous sight." It was, wrote one German reporter, "a night of deadly menace, a nightmare in...blazing torches."
As the marchers came by the Chancellery, there were tumultuous cheers for Hitler, who stood in an open window saluting them. He was so excited that night, he could hardly stand still. He was raising his arm up and down heiling, smiling, and laughing so much, his eyes filled with tears. "It was an extraordinary experience," recalled Papen, who was standing behind Hitler. "The endless repetition of the triumphal cry: 'Heil, Heil, Sieg Heil!' rang in my ears like a tocsin." When Hitler turned to speak with Papen, his voice choked with emotion. "What an immense task we have set for ourselves, Herr von Papen - we must never part until our work is accomplished." Hitler and Papen were much closer allies than anyone at the time imagined.

It was after midnight when the parade ended. Being too excited to sleep, Hitler, Goering, Goebbels, and a few other Nazis sat up talking for hours. They could hardly believe it had actually happened: they were in the Chancellery at last. That evening, Hitler said to Goebbels, "No one gets me out of here alive." It was one of the few promises he kept.

On the morning of January 31, Hitler's storm troopers gave the German people a glimpse of what Nazi rule would be like. All over Germany, thugs in brown shirts took possession of the streets and roughed up Communists, socialists, and Jews; they chased socialist mayors and officials out of government buildings and even broke into the private homes of their political enemies. When people complained to Papen, he laughed. "Let the storm troopers have their fling." Among his friends at the Herrenklub, an exclusive gentlemens club, he boasted: "We've hired Hitler." To a skeptic he replied: "What do you want? I have Hindenburg's confidence. Within two months we will have pushed Hitler so far in the corner that he'll squeak."

The facts seemed to support Papen's optimism. Not only did Papen have Hindenburg"s confidence, but in fact the old president had promised never to receive Hitler unless he was accompanied by his vice-chancellor. Papen also held the important post of minister-president of Prussia, Germany's largest and most powerful state. From the composition of the cabinet, it seemed all the real power was in the hands of the conservatives: the aristocratic General von Blomberg was minister of defense, Baron von Neurath, a career diplomat, was foreign minister, and the old archreactionary Hugenberg was both minister of economics and minister of agriculture. The Nazis were outnumbered six to two.

The two Nazis in the cabinet, Wilhelm Frick and Goering, held posts that were thought to be insignificant. Frick was minister of the interior, but he did not control the police, which in Germany was under the jurisdiction of the individual state governments. Goering was made minister without portfolio, but with the promise that he would be minister of aviation as soon as Germany had an air force. He was also named minister of the interior of Prussia, an office that did not receive much notice by the public but did control the Prussian police.

The aristocrats and gentlemen of the Right who made up the majority of Hitler's cabinet hated the concept of democracy even more than the Nazis did. These men belonged to the old ruling class of the kaiser's

Germany. They wanted to regain their old position of supremacy, lost in 1918. They wanted to restore the monarchy, suppress the socialist unions, avenge the loss of World War I, and make Germany the dominant power in Europe. It was obvious why such reactionary nationalists helped put Hitler in power: their goals and his were very similar.
Few people knew the full extent of Papen's collaboration with Hitler. Historians have said he "did more than anyone else outside the Nazi party to help Hitler to power." Papen helped Hitler because he was trying to control him and use the Nazis for his own aims.
Papen was a handsome aristocratic-looking man with distinguished gray hair and an officer's mustache. From an impoverished family of the Westphalian nobility, he became a General Staff officer, a skillful horseman, and a man of great charm. After a successful marriage to the daughter of a wealthy Saar industrialist, he bought a large block of shares in the Center party's newspaper, Germania. For a short time in 1932, Papen was chancellor, but his government had no popular support.
Papen believed it would be rather easy for an aristocratic officer like himself to manipulate a former corporal, like Hitler, and thus be able to use the Nazi's mass following to accomplish the aims of the upper-class conservative nationalists.
Hitler immediately began to outmaneuver his conservative colleagues. He reported to the cabinet that the Center party was making impossible demands and could not be counted on to form a coalition with the Nazis and the Nationalists that would have a majority in the Reichstag. Because of this situation, Hitler argued he would have to call for new elections. The only "demand" the Center party made was that Hitler promise to govern constitutionally, but none of the other members of the cabinet bothered to check Hitler's statement. They agreed to new elections on the condition that Hitler promise that the composition of the cabinet would not change regardless of the outcome of the voting.
New elections would provide Hitler with a chance to improve on the poor results the Nazis had received at the polls the past November. If the Nazis won a clear majority in the elections, they might be able to get rid of their coalition partners. Hitler had every reason to believe the election campaign would be a big success. The entire machinery of government, including the radio, was now under Nazi control and could be used for campaigning. The party had been flooded with new applicants for membership since he had become chancellor. In the cabinet meeting on February 2, Hitler discussed his preparations for the elections. Wilhelm Frick, the Nazi minister of the interior, proposed that the government set aside a million marks for the election campaign. Count von Schwerin von Krosigk, the minister of finance, rejected this suggestion. Hitler did not force the issue. He would have to get the money elsewhere.
The theme of the Nazi election campaign was to be the fight against communism. Hitler opened the attack in a late-night radio broadcast to the nation on February 1. He blamed the hard times Germany had gone through since 1918 on the Social Democrats, which had been the largest party in the Reichstag during most of those years. The Social Democrats, he reminded his listeners, were actually a Marxist party. "Fourteen years of Marxism," he said, "have ruined Germany; one year of bolshevism [communism] would destroy her. The richest and fairest territories of the world would be turned into a smoking heap of ruins. Even the sufferings of the last decade and a half could not be compared to the misery of a Europe in the heart of which the red flag of destruction has been hoisted." He went on to promise to put the unemployed back to work and save the peasants from bankruptcy.

On his fourth day in office, just after opening the election campaign, Hitler took time off to attend a very important dinner. He had been invited to the home of General von Hammerstein, chief of staff of the army, to meet the leading officers of the army and navy. In a speech that lasted almost two hours, Hitler explained his plans for rebuilding German military power.
The generals were the real power in Germany during the Weimar period. After World War II, many Germans tried to cover up the role certain members of the Officer Corps had played in helping to put Hitler in power. Many historians naively accepted this view, but the real story is quite different. Traditionally, the German Army ruled from behind the scenes and had the final "power to veto" any important issue. After the loss of World War I, the Versailles Treaty severely restricted the size of the German Army. The only way the generals could maintain mass training and develop new weapons was to finance private paramilitary units, like the Free Corps, with secret army funds.
Hitler not only began his career as an army agent, but even in the 1930s he was supported by a powerful faction in the army. Over several years, General von Schleicher, who was in charge of a secret informal political department of the army, funneled over ten million marks to Hitler. Why? Many military officers wanted an authoritarian government that could unify the nation. The people needed to be infused with a new spirit of patriotism because powerful interests were planning a war of revenge against the Allies. Naturally there was a division of opinion among the generals as to how much power to give Hitler. Hindenburg originally had strong reservations about appointing a man from a lower-class background, like Hitler, chancellor. However, the aggressive action the Nazis took against Communists was admired by Hindenburg, and his relationship with Hitler rapidly improved.
One day, Hindenburg summoned Hitler when Papen was away from Berlin. Hitler informed the president that Papen was out of town and reminded him of the rule he (Hindenburg) had made, that the chancellor could visit him only when accompanied by the vice-chancellor. "The old gentleman [Hindenburg]," said Hitler, "replied that he wished to see me alone, and that in the future the presence of Papen could be regarded as unnecessary. Within three weeks, he had progressed so far that his attitude towards me became affectionate and paternal. Talking of the elections fixed for the 3rd of March, he said, 'What are we going to do if you fail to get a majority? We shall have the same difficulties all over again.'"

At the beginning of the election campaign, Hitler and Papen persuaded old President von Hindenburg to sign an emergency decree to protect law and order. The decree gave Nazi officials the right to prohibit public meetings. Newspapers could be suppressed if they "incited" civil disobedience or published "false" reports.

Back to the '30s: how the GOP uses Nazi techniques to rally the mob December 10, 2009
Posted by Jules Siegel
By Hrafnkell Haraldsson
Instead of Der Angriff and the Völkischer Beobachter we have FOX News and World Net Daily. Instead of Joseph Goebbels and Alfred Rosenberg we have Rupert Murdoch and Joseph Farah. These media outlets spout anti- liberalism as vociferously and viciously as any NSDAP propa ganda organ. Like the party ideologues noted above, they employ ad hominem attacks in place of cogent analysis and prefer name- calling to actual news.
Murdoch, Farah and their minions take street- fighting techniques in front of minions through use of glossy modern technology.
Witness, for example, Glenn Beck and Rush Limbaugh went on the attacked Sen. Mary Landrieu (D- LA) for her stance on the healthcare debate in the Senate. But they did not critique her position based on its merits, and by offering a cogent counter- argument. Instead, both called a female US senator a prostitute (The Rush Limbaugh Show November 23 2009 and The Glenn Beck Program November 23,2009).
This sort of attack is commonplace and differs not at all from the tactics used by the National Socialist Press in the 20's and 30's.
• Glenn Beck listed people he'd like to "beat to death with a shovel." In 2001, Beck enumerated the various people that he "would want to kill with a shovel," or "line up" and "shoot … in the head," including Rep. Charles Rangel (D- NY). (Glenn Beck Program, 3/ 9/ 01)
• The Republican Tea- Party mobs embrace this principle. Ideo logical rhetoric backs it up: We see for example from Ann Coulter, Vester: You say you'd rather not talk to liberals at all? Coulter:
I think a baseball bat is the most effective way these days. (FOX News Channel, DaySide with Linda Vester, 10/ 6)
• "Would you kill someone for that?…I'm thinking about killing Michael Moore…I could kill him myself, or if I would need to hire some body to do it,… No, I think I could. I think he could be looking me in the eye, you know, and I could just be choking the life out. Is this wrong? I stopped wearing my What Would Jesus — band — Do, and I've lost all sense of right and wrong now. I used to be able to say, 'Yeah, I'd kill Michael Moore,' and then I'd see the little band: What Would Jesus Do? And then I'd realize, 'Oh, you wouldn't kill Michael Moore. Or at least you wouldn't choke him to death.' And you know, well, I'm not sure." (Glenn Beck Program, 5/ 17/ 05)

• Beck, joking about poisoning Nancy Pelosi: "So, Speaker Pelosi, I just wanted to — you gonna drink your wine? Are you blind? Do those eyes not work? There you — I want you to drink it now. Drink it. Drink it. Drink it… By the way, I put poison in your —" (Glenn Beck Pro gram, 8/ 6/ 09)
• Bill O'Reilly, of people who criticize him, The Radio Factor, September 27, 2007: "You know, look, if I could strangle these peo ple and not go to hell and get executed, I would, but I can't."
• Bill O'Reilly — radio show, Sept. 14, 2005: "I just wish Katrina had only hit the United Nations building, nothing else, just had flooded them out, and I wouldn't have rescued them."
• Rush Limbaugh October 20, 2009, The Rush Limbaugh Show: "This guy from The New York Times, if he really thinks that humanity is destroying the planet, humanity is destroying the climate, that human beings in their natural existence are going to cause the extinction of life on Earth — Andrew Revkin. Mr. Revkin, why don't you just go kill yourself and help the planet by dying?"
• Right Wing blogger Roger Erickson March 31, 2009: "At what point do the people tell the politicians to go to hell? At what point do they get off the couch, march down to their state legislator's house, pull him outside, and beat him to a bloody pulp for being an idiot?"

Part 2: Liberal/Jewish Media and Right Wing Propaganda. This is the second installment of a detailed examination of the parallels between the Nazi movement in Germany and the new Republican methodology since the election of Obama. Also see parts 1, 3, 4, and 5.

Now that we've examined the street-level thuggery in Part One, let's look at some examples of how the Republican "elite" work.

NSDAP and GOP: Two Medias; One Tactic
Everyone is familiar by now with the Right-wing rhetoric concerning the "liberal media elite." Personal responsibility goes right out the window if you can just blame the other guy for lying about you. Again we see a striking similarity between the National Socialists and the Republicans – fix blame, and then accuse them of controlling the media. The two seem to go hand-in-hand.
"Barack Obama only won because the media favored him and unfairly denigrated the abilities and accomplishments of John McCain and Sarah Palin." We've heard this before, of course. It probably won't surprise you to know where:
Hitler, July 5, 1942, "New agencies all the world over…are for the most part in the hands of Jews."1

If you substitute “liberal” for “Jew” you have the same language. Again, the liberals, like the Jews, are guilty of “fabrications”: Sarah Palin, June 3, 2009, Anchorage: Palin spoke of “the entrenched bureaucrats and the elite self-proclaimed intellectuals, and the smug lobbyists who dominate Washington, and the liberal media that is imposing its will on Washington, embracing that status quo, that business as usual…” 2
This is the same language Hitler used of the “Jewish intellectuals” and communists who dominated Weimar government. As an aside, she was displaying typical intellectual dishonesty by lifting much of her speech from “an article written four years ago by Newt Gingrich and Craig Shirley without attribution.”3
The Conservapedia echoes Hitler: “The Liberal media elite is the clique of highly paid, left-leaning executives and journalists who directly control most output of the main newspapers and broadcasting organizations.”4
The media is in the hands of the Jews (communists)! The media is in the hands of the liberals (communists)! I don’t have to make this stuff up. This is like shooting ducks in a pond or fishing with a hand grenade.
If that is not enough, surely you remember the Nazi (mis)use of the press. The National Socialist media became an outlet not for news, but for propaganda. There is the most famous newspaper owner of all, Joseph Goebbels and his paper Der Angriff (The Attack – aptly named). Then there is the Völkischer Beobachter (Folkish [Ethnic] Observer) edited first by Dietrich Eckart, an infamous “Jew-baiter”, then by crank-ideologist Alfred Rosenberg.

Today, media has moved on to television and the Internet. Instead of Der Angriff and the Völkischer Beobachter we have FOX News and World Net Daily. Instead of Joseph Goebbels and Alfred Rosenberg we have Rupert Murdoch and Joseph Farah. These media outlets spout anti-liberalism as vociferously and viciously as any NSDAP propaganda organ. Like the party ideologues noted above, they employ ad hominem attacks in place of cogent analysis and prefer name-calling to actual news.
Murdoch, Farah and their minions take street-fighting techniques in front of minions through use of glossy modern technology.
Witness, for example, Glenn Beck and Rush Limbaugh went on the attacked Sen. Mary Landrieu (D-LA) for her stance on the healthcare debate in the Senate. But they did not critique her position based on its merits, and by offering a cogent counter-argument. Instead, both called a female US senator a prostitute (The Rush Limbaugh Show November 23 2009 and The Glenn Beck Program November 23,2009).
This sort of attack is commonplace and differs not at all from the tactics used by the National Socialist Press in the 20’s and 30’s. Vilification is the order of the day. Analysis of the facts, when it takes place at all, comes in a distant second. As Media Matters for America reports, Under its president, Roger Ailes, Fox News routinely employs racially charged appeals to foment opposition to the Obama administration and other progressive figures, such as Glenn Beck's comments that President Obama is a "racist" and "has a deep-seated hatred for white people or the white culture." Before launching the Fox News Channel, Ailes worked as a media consultant for several Republican campaigns where evidence shows he similarly appealed to racial fears and biases for political gain, and as executive producer for Rush Limbaugh's television show, during which Limbaugh made several controversial statements.5

And of course, just as National Socialist ideologues and leaders motivated the mob, so do Republican ideologues. As I noted above, Republican objections are not generally issued as cogent and well-thought-out rebuttals of liberal positions but as ad hominem attacks, character assassinations, and even suggested violence. This is true not only of the rank-and-file but of the leadership, the party ideologues, as can be seen from the examples below.

• Glenn Beck listed people he'd like to "beat to death with a shovel." In 2001, Beck enumerated the various people that he "would want to kill with a shovel," or "line up" and "shoot … in the head," including Rep. Charles Rangel (D-NY). (Glenn Beck Program, 3/9/01)

• The Republican Tea-Party mobs embrace this principle. Ideological rhetoric backs it up: We see for example from Ann Coulter, Vester: You say you'd rather not talk to liberals at all? Coulter: I think a baseball bat is the most effective way these days. (FOX News Channel, DaySide with Linda Vester, 10/6)

• "Would you kill someone for that?…I'm thinking about killing Michael Moore…I could kill him myself, or if I would need to hire somebody to do it,… No, I think I could. I think he could be looking me in the eye, you know, and I could just be choking the life out. Is this wrong? I stopped wearing my What Would Jesus — band — Do, and I've lost all sense of right and wrong now. I used to be able to say, 'Yeah, I'd kill Michael Moore,' and then I'd see the little band: What Would Jesus Do? And then I'd realize, 'Oh, you wouldn't kill Michael Moore. Or at least you wouldn't choke him to death.' And you know, well, I'm not sure." (Glenn Beck Program, 5/17/05)

• Beck, joking about poisoning Nancy Pelosi: "So, Speaker Pelosi, I just wanted to — you gonna drink your wine? Are you blind? Do those eyes not work? There you — I want you to drink it now. Drink it. Drink it. Drink it… By the way, I put poison in your —" (Glenn Beck Program, 8/6/09)

• Bill O'Reilly, of people who criticize him, The Radio Factor, September 27, 2007: "You know, look, if I could strangle these people and not go to hell and get executed, I would, but I can't."

• Bill O'Reilly - radio show, Sept. 14, 2005: "I just wish Katrina had only hit the United Nations building, nothing else, just had flooded them out, and I wouldn't have rescued them."

• Rush Limbaugh October 20, 2009, The Rush Limbaugh Show: "This guy from The New York Times, if he really thinks that humanity is destroying the planet, humanity is destroying the climate, that human beings in their natural existence are going to cause the extinction of life on Earth — Andrew Revkin. Mr. Revkin, why don't you just go kill yourself and help the planet by dying?"

• Right Wing blogger Roger Erickson March 31, 2009: "At what point do the people tell the politicians to go to hell? At what point do they get off the couch, march down to their state legislator's house, pull him outside, and beat him to a bloody pulp for being an idiot?"

Semitism and anti-communism, conservative values

http://www.harley.com/people/adolph-hitler.html

Interesting People ADOLPH HITLER
If there is one person in history whose activities changed the world the most, that person is Adolf Hitler. Hitler (1889-1945) was the German dictator who founded the National Socialism (Nazi) movement in 1920. Within twonty years, Hitler had led Germany and its allies into World War II (1939-1945), by any measure, the most devastating war in history, with over 60 million people killed.
As a young man, Hitler served in the Bavarian army during World War I. (Bavaria is a part of Germany.) Although he was recognized for bravery, the experience embittered him, and he blamed Germany's defeat on Jews and Marxists.
In 1921, Hitler became the leader of the German National Socialist (Nazi) Party. In 1923, he unsuccessfully attempted to overthrow the Bavarian government — the so-called Beer Hall Putsch — and was imprisoned for nine months. During that time, Hitler wrote the book Mein Kampf ("My Struggle"), in which he laid bare his theories of hate and anti-Semitism, and his plans for world domination, a vision in which the German master race would create the so-called Third Reich. ("Germany will either become a World Power or will not continue to exist at all." — Vol. 2, Ch. XIV)
In time, Mein Kampf would become the bible of the Nazi party. The grew slowly, however, until the Great Depression, during which Hitler's skills as a speaker and organizer allowed him to capitalize on the growing social and economic unrest. As a master of the "big lie", he was able to build substantial grass-roots support, based on a platform of anti-Semitism and anti-communism.
Although he had some false starts, Hitler became Chancellor of Germany in 1933 and, within a year, was given full dictatorial powers by the government. In concert with other Nazi leaders — principally Goering, Himmler and Goebbels — Hitler crushed all opposition and took control of most facets of German life. In 1934, laws were passed to establish official anti-Semitism and to create the first concentration camps.
On August 2, 1934, the elderly president of Germany died. Within hours, Hitler declared himself Fuhrer (supreme ruler) of Germany.

Technically, the declaration was illegal. However, less than three weeks later, a special election was held in which 90 percent of the German people voted to confirm Hitler as Fuhrer. Hitler was now the absolute ruler of Germany, a law unto himself.
Over the next few years, Hitler prepared Germany for war, carrying out many political maneuvers that allowed him to extend his power into smaller, less powerful countries. On September 1, 1939, Germany invaded Poland. Two days later, Britain, France, Australia and New Zealand (the Allies) declared war on Germany, formally starting World War II.
At first, Germany had a great deal of military success, invading and conquering much of Europe, North Africa and Russia. On December 11, 1941, Germany declared war on the United States, upon which the U.S. entered the war on the side of the Allies. Still, it was some time before the Germans would be stopped. Indeed, on April 26, 1942, Hitler declared, "This war no longer bears the characteristics of former inter-European conflicts. It is one of those elemental conflicts which usher in a new millennium and which shake the world once in a thousand years."
In the fullness of time, Hitler was proved to be wrong. On February 2, 1943, he received his first major setback when the Germans were defeated at Stalingrad in southwest Russia. Over the next two years, the Allies began to defeat Germany, one battle at a time and, by the spring of 1945, virtually all of Europe and North Africa had been liberated.
With the Third Reich collapsing around him and the Russians approaching, Hitler hid in an underground bunker in Berlin. On April 29, 1945, as the Russians approached the city, Hitler married his longtime mistress Eva Braun. The next day, both Hitler and Braun committed suicide.

Mussolini the father of fascism hated liberalism; his movement was the first fascist movement – a halfway house between conservative authoritarianism and modern totalitarianism

http://docs.google.com/gview?a=v&q=cache:NIzWVpV3T7kJ:staff.esuhsd.org/dayd/ap_euro/29_dictatorships_and_world_war_2/Chapter%252029%2520-%2520Summary%2520%26%2520Outline.pdf+mussolini+hated+marxists&hl=en&gl=us

Mussolini and fascism in Italy
A. Mussolini hated liberalism; his movement was the first fascist movement – a halfway house between conservative authoritarianism and modern totalitarianism.
B. The fascist seizure of power
1. Prior to 1914, Italy was moving toward democracy but with problems: Catholics, conservatives, and landowners hated liberalism and the country was divided.

a. Only in Italy did the Socialist party gain leadership prior to 1914.
2. The First World War and postwar problems ended the move toward democracy in Italy.
a. Workers and peasants felt cheated because wartime promises of reform were not carried out.
b. Nationalists felt cheated by the war settlement.

c. The Russian Revolution energized Italy’s socialists into occupying factories and farms.
3. By 1922, most Italians were opposed to liberal, parliamentary government.
4. Mussolini’s Fascists opposed the “Socialist threat” with physical force (the Black Shirts).
5. Mussolini marched on Rome in 1922 and forced the king to name him head of the government.
C. The regime in action
1. Mussolini’s Fascists manipulated elections and killed the Socialist leader Matteotti.
2. Between 1924 and 1926, Mussolini built a one-party Fascist dictatorship but did not establish a fully totalitarian state.
a. Much of the old power structure remained, particularly the conservatives, who controlled the army, economy, and state.
b. The Catholic church supported Mussolini because he recognized the Vatican as an independent state and gave the church heavy financial support.
c. Women were repressed, but Jews were not persecuted until late in the Second World War.
d. Overall, Mussolini’s fascist Italy was never really totalitarian.
IV.Hitler and Nazism in Germany
A. The roots of Nazism
1. German Nazism was a product of Hitler, of Germany’s social and political crisis, and the general attack on liberalism and rationality.
2. Hitler was born in Austria, was a school dropout, and was rejected by the Imperial art school.
3. Hitler became a fanatical nationalist while in Vienna, vhere he absorbed anti-Semitic and racist ideas.
4. He adopted the ideas of some fanatical Christians (e.g., Lueger) that capitalism and liberalism resulted in excessive individualism.
5. He became obsessed with anti-Semitism and racism, and believed that Jews and Marxists lost the First World War for Germany.
a. He believed in a Jewish-Marxist plot to destroy German culture.
6. By 1921, he had reshaped the tiny extremist German Workers’ group into the Nazi party, using the mass rally as a particularly effective tool of propaganda.

a. The party grew rapidly.
b. Hitler and the party attempted to overthrow the Weimar government, but he was defeated and sent to jail (1923).
B. Hitler’s road to power
1. The trial after Hitler’s attempted coup brought him much publicity, but the Nazi party remained small until 1929.
2. Written in jail, his autobiography, Mein Kampf, was an outline of his desire to achieve German racial supremacy and domination of Europe, under the leadership of a dictator (Führer).
3. The depression made the Nazi party attractive to the lower middle class, who were seized by panic as unemployment soared and Communists made election gains.
a. By late 1932, some 43 percent of the labor force was unemployed.
b. Hitler favored government programs to bring about economic recovery.
4. By 1932, the Nazi party was the largest in the Reichstag-having 38 percent of the total.
5. Hitler wisely stressed the economic issue rather than the anti-Jewish and racist nationalism issues.
6. He stressed simple slogans tied to national rebirth to arouse hysterical fanaticism in the masses.

7. He appealed to the youth. Almost 40 percent of the Nazi party were under 30 years of age.
8. One reason for his rise to power is that Bruning and Hindenburg had already turned to rule by way of emergency decree.
9. Another reason Hitler won is that the communists welcomed Hitler as the last breath of monopoly capitalism.
10. Key people in the army and big business along with conservative and nationalistic politicians believed that they could control Hitler; Hitler was legally appointed chancellor in 1933.
C. The Nazi state and society
I. The Enabling Act of March 1933 gave Hitler absolute dictatorial power.
2. Germany became a one-party state-only the Nazi party was legal.
a. The Nazi government was hill of rivalries and inefficiencies, leaving Hitler to act as he wished.
b. Strikes were forbidden and labor unions were replaced by the Nazi Labor Front.
c. The Nazis took over the government bureaucracy.
d. The Nazis took control of universities, writers, publishing houses;

democratic, socialist, and Jewish literature was blacklisted.
3. Hitler gained control of the military by crushing his own storm troopers, the SA, thus ending the “second revolution.”
4. The Gestapo, or secret police, used tenor and purges to strengthen Hitler’s hold on power.
5. Hitler set out to eliminate the Jews.
a. The Nuremberg Laws (1935) deprived Jews of their citizenship.
b. By 1938, 150,000 of Germany’s 500,000 Jews had left Germany.
c. Kristallnacht was a wave of violence directed at Jews and their synagogues and businesses.
D. Hitler’s popularity
1. Hitler promised and delivered economic recovery through public works projects and military spending.
a. Unemployment dropped. The standard of living rose moderately – but business profits rose sharply.
b. Those who were not Jews, Slays, Gypsies, Jehovah’s Witnesses, communists, or homosexuals experienced greater opportunities and equality.
2. Hitler reduced Germany’s traditional class distinctions; the old ruling elites had to give way to lower-middle-class people in Hitler’s train.
a. Yet few historians believe that Hitler brought on a real social revolution: the well-educated classes held on to their advantaged position, and women remained largely housewives and mothers.
3. He appealed to Germans for nationalistic reasons.
4. Communists, trade unionists, and some Christians opposed Hitler; many who opposed him were executed.
V. Nazi expansion and the Second World War
A. The chief concepts of Nazism were space and race-which demanded territorial expansion.
B. Aggression and appeasement (1933-1939)
1. When he was in a weak position, Hitler voiced his intention to overturn an unjust system; when strong, he kept increasing his demands.
2. He lied about his intentions; he withdrew from the League of Nations in order to rearm Germany.

3. Germany worked to add Austria to a greater Germany, established a military draft, and declared the Treaty of Versailles null and void.
a. An Anglo-German naval agreement in 1935 broke Germany’s isolation.
b. In violation of the Treaty of Versailles, Hitler occupied the demilitarized Rhineland in 1936.

4. The British policy of appeasement, motivated by guilt, fear of communism, and pacifism, lasted far into 1939.
5. Mussolini attacked Ethiopia in 1935 and joined Germany in supporting the fascists in Spain (the Rome-Berlin Axis alliance).
6. Germany, Italy, and Japan formed an alliance.
7. Hitler annexed Austria and demanded part of Czechoslovakia in 1938.
8. Chamberlain flew to Munich to appease Hitler and agree to his territorial demands.
9. Hitler accelerated his aggression and occupied all of Czechoslovakia in 1939.
10. In 1939, Hitler and Stalin signed a public nonaggression pact and a secret pact that divided eastern Europe into German and Russian zones.
11. Germany attacked Poland, and Britain and France declared war on Germany (1939).
C. Hitler’s empire (1939-1942)
1. The key to Hitler’s military success was speed and force (the blitzkrieg).
2. He crushed Poland quickly and then France; by July 1940, the Nazis ruled nearly all of Europe except Britain.
3. He bombed British cities in an attempt to break British morale but did not succeed.
4. In 1941, Hitler’s forces invaded Russia and conquered the Ukraine and got as far as Leningrad and Moscow until stopped by the severe winter weather.
5. After Japan attacked Pearl Harbor (1941), Hitler also declared war on the United States.
6. Hitler began building a New Order based on racial imperialism.
a. Nordic peoples were treated with preference; the French were heavily taxed; the Slays were treated as “subhumans.”
b. The 55 evacuated Polish peasants to create a German “settlement space.”
c. Polish workers and Russian prisoners of war were sent to Germany to work as slave laborers. Most did not survive.
d. Jews, Gypsies, Jehovah’s Witnesses, and communists were condemned to death.
7. Six million Jews from all over Europe were murdered by killing squads, in ghettos, or in concentration camps.
a. At the extermination camps such as Auschwitz-Birkenau the victims were forced into gas chambers.
b. Recent research suggests that many Germans knew of and participated in these killings.
c. Some scholars believe that the key reason so many Germans (and non-Germans) did not protest the murders is that they felt no personal responsibility for Jews.

E. The Grand Alliance
1. The Allies had three policies that led them to victory.
a. The United States concentrated on European victory first, then Japan.
b. The Americans and British put military needs before political questions, thus avoiding conflict over postwar settlements.

c. The Allies adopted the principle of “unconditional surrender” of Germany and Japan, denying Hitler the possibility of dividing his foes.
2. American aid to Britain and the Soviets, along with the heroic support of the British and Soviet peoples and the assistance of resistance groups throughout Europe, contributed to the eventual victory.
F. The tide of battle
1. The Germans were defeated at Stalingrad at the end of 1942, and from there on the Soviets took the offensive.
2. At the same time, American, British, and Australian victories in the Pacific put Japan on the defensive.
a. The Battle of the Coral Sea (1942) stopped the Japanese advance.
b. The Battle of Midway Island (1942) established American naval superiority in the Pacific.
3. The British defeat of Rommel at the Battle of El Alamein (1942) helped drive the Axis powers from North Africa in 1943.
4. Italy surrendered in 1943, but fighting continued as the Germans seized Rome and northern Italy.
5. Bombing of Germany and Hitler’s brutal elimination of opposition caused the Germans to fight on.
6. The British and Americans invaded German-held France in June 1944 but did not cross into Germany until March 1945.
a. The Soviets pushed from the east, crossing the Elbe and meeting the Americans on the other side on April 26, 1945; Hitler committed suicide, and Germany surrendered on May 7, 1945.
b. The United States dropped two atomic bombs on Japan in August 1945, and it too surrendered.

Francisco Franco
From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

For other uses see, Franco (disambiguation).

Francisco Franco Bahamonde (4 December 1892 in Ferrol – 20 November 1975 in Madrid), commonly known as Francisco Franco (Spanish pronunciation: [fran'θisko 'fraŋko]) was a military general and dictator of Spain from October 1936, and de facto regent of the nominally restored Kingdom of Spain from 1947 until his death in 1975. During his almost forty year reign, Franco's governance of Spain went through various different phases. Although the most common ideological features which were present throughout included a strong sense of Spanish nationalism and protection of its territorial integrity, Catholicism, anti-communism and traditional values.[1]
From a military family, Franco originally set out for a career in the Spanish Navy—however this had reduced since Spain has lost much of its empire so he became a solider instead. During the early period of his career he fought in Morocco during the Rif War, rising to the position of general. Afterwards he was stationed on the Spanish mainland and saw service suppressing an anarchist led strike in 1934; defending the stability of Alcalá-Zamora's conservative republican government.
Everything changed in 1936 with the election of the Popular Front, a far left coalition of socialists, communists, anarchists and liberal republicans. A period of severe instability ensued, with escalating violence and distrust between supporters of each side. Anti-clerical violence against the Church by leftist militants raised tensions.
After the assassination of José Calvo Sotelo, by a commando unit of the Assault Guards—the military felt a communist dictatorship was nearing. Franco and the military participated in a coup d'etat against the Popular Front government.
The coup failed and devolved into the Spanish Civil War during which he emerged as the leader of the Nationalists against the Popular Front government. After winning the civil war with support from Benito Mussolini's Italy and Adolf Hitler's Germany—while the Soviet Union provided help to the Popular Party—he dissolved the Spanish Parliament. He then established a right-wing authoritarian regime that lasted until 1978, when a new constitution was drafted. During the Second World War, Franco officially maintained a policy of non-belligerency and later of neutrality. However, he agreed to allow the many Spanish volunteers, known as the Blue Division to join the Germany Army in the fight against Communism on the Eastern Front. After the end of World War II, Franco maintained his control in Spain through the implementation of repressive and authoritarian measures: the systematic suppression of dissident views through censorship and coercion,[2][3] the institutionalization of torture,[4] the imprisonment of ideological enemies in concentration camps throughout the country (such as Los Merinales in Seville, San Marcos in León, Castuera in Extremadura, and Miranda de Ebro)[5], the implementation of forced labor in prisons[6] and the use of the death penalty and heavy prison sentences as deterrents for his ideological enemies[7]. During the Cold War, the United States established a diplomatic alliance with Spain, due to Franco's strong anti-Communist policy. American President Richard Nixon toasted Franco, [8] and, after Franco's death, stated: "General Franco was a loyal friend and ally of the United States[9]." After his death Spain gradually began its transition to democracy. Today, pre-constitutional symbols from the Franco regime (such as the national flag with the Imperial Eagle) are banned by law in Spain.

Early life

Francisco Franco was born on 4 December 1892, in El Ferrol, Galicia, which is Spain's chief naval base in the north. The Franco family was originally from Andalucia and are thought to have a degree of aristocratic ancestry.[note 1] Since relocating to Galicia they were strongly involved in the Spanish Navy and over two centuries produced naval officers for six generations uninterupted, right down to Franco's father Nicolás Franco y Salgado.
Franco's mother was María del Pilar Bahamonde y Pardo de Andrade and his parents maried in 1890. The Bahamonde family was of local Galician aristocratic stock, she was descended from VII Conde de Lemos and his wife the third Condessa de Villalva, who were descended from Portuguese royalty and thus from many other European kings.[10][11] He had two brothers, Nicolás (Ferrol, 1891 - 1977), Spanish Navy Officer and Diplomat married to María Isabel Pascual del Pobil y Ravello, and Ramón, a pioneering Aviator, and two sisters María del Pilar (Ferrol, 1894 - Madrid, 1989) and María de la Paz (Ferrol, 1899 - Ferrol, 1900), with whom he spent much of his childhood.

[edit]
Military career

[edit]
Rif War, rise through the ranks

Francisco was to follow his father into the Navy but as a result of the Spanish-American War the country had lost much of its navy as well as most of its colonies. Not needing more officers, entry into the Naval Academy was closed from 1906 to 1913. To his father's chagrin, he decided to join the Spanish Army. In 1907, he entered the Infantry Academy in Toledo, from which he graduated in 1910. He was commissioned as a lieutenant. Two years later, he obtained a commission to Morocco. Spanish efforts to physically occupy their new African protectorate provoked the protracted Rif War (from 1909 to 1927) with native Moroccans. Tactics at the time resulted in heavy losses among Spanish military officers, but also gave the chance of earning promotion through merit. It was said that officers would get either la caja o la faja (a coffin or a general's sash). Franco soon gained a reputation as a good officer. He joined the newly formed regulares, colonial native troops with Spanish officers, who acted as shock troops.
In 1916, at the age of 23 and already a captain, he was badly wounded in a skirmish at El Biutz and possibly lost a testicle.[12] His survival marked him permanently in the eyes of the native troops as a man of baraka (good luck). He was also recommended unsuccessfully for Spain's highest honor for gallantry, the coveted Cruz Laureada de San Fernando. Instead, he was promoted to major (comandante), becoming the youngest field grade officer in the Spanish Army. From 1917 to 1920, he was posted on the Spanish mainland. That last year, Lieutenant Colonel José Millán Astray, a histrionic but charismatic officer, founded the Spanish Foreign Legion, along similar lines to the French Foreign Legion. Franco became the Legion's second-in-command and returned to Africa. On 24 July 1921, the poorly commanded and overextended Spanish Army suffered a crushing defeat at Annual at the hands of the Rif tribes led by the Abd el-Krim brothers. The Legion symbolically, if not materially, saved the Spanish enclave of Melilla after a gruelling three-day forced march led by Franco. In 1923, already a lieutenant colonel, he was made commander of the Legion. The same year, he married María del Carmen Polo y Martínez-Valdès; they had one child, a daughter, María del Carmen, born in 1926.[13] As a special mark of honor, his best man (padrino) at the wedding was King Alfonso XIII, a fact that would mark him during the Republic as a monarchical officer. Promoted to colonel, Franco led the first wave of troops ashore at Al Hoceima in 1925. This landing in the heartland of Abd el-Krim's tribe, combined with the French invasion from the south, spelled the beginning of the end for the short-lived Republic of the Rif. Becoming the youngest general in Spain in 1926, Franco was appointed in 1928 director of the newly created the General Military Academy of Zaragoza, a new college for all Army cadets, replacing the former separate institutions for young men seeking to become officers in infantry, cavalry, artillery, and other branches of the army.

During the Second Spanish Republic

With the fall of the monarchy in 1931, in keeping with his long-standing apolitical record, Franco did not take any notable stand. But the closing of the Academy, in June, by War Minister Manuel Azaña, provoked his first clash with the Republic. Azaña found Franco's farewell speech to the cadets[14] insulting. For six months, Franco was without a post and under surveillance.
On 5 February 1932, he was given a command in La Coruña. Franco avoided involvement in José Sanjurjo's attempted coup that year, and even wrote a hostile letter to Sanjurjo expressing his anger over the attempt. As a side result of Azaña's military reform, in January 1933, Franco was relegated from the first to the 24th in the list of Brigadiers; conversely, the same year (17 February), he was given the military command of the Balearic Islands: a post above his rank.
New elections held in October 1933 resulted in a center-right majority. In opposition to this government, a revolutionary movement broke out 5 October 1934. This uprising was rapidly quelled in most of the country, but gained a stronghold in Asturias, with the support of the miners' unions. Franco, already general of a Division and aide to the war minister, Diego Hidalgo, was put in command of the operations directed to suppress the insurgency. The forces of the Army in Africa were to carry the brunt of this, with General Eduardo López Ochoa as commander in the field. After two weeks of heavy fighting (and a death toll estimated between 1,200 and 2,000), the rebellion was suppressed. The insurgency in Asturias sharpened the antagonism between Left and Right. Franco and López Ochoa—who, prior to the campaign in Asturias, was seen as a left-leaning officer—were marked by the left as enemies. At the start of the Civil War, López Ochoa was assassinated. Some time after these events, Franco was briefly commander-in-chief of the Army of Africa (from 15 February onwards), and from 19 May 1935 on, Chief of the General Staff.

1936 general election
After the ruling centre-right coalition collapsed amid the Straperlo corruption scandal, new elections were scheduled. Two wide coalitions formed: the Popular Front on the left, ranging from Republican Union Party to Communists, and the Frente Nacional on the right, ranging from the center radicals to the conservative Carlists. On February 16, 1936, the left won by a narrow margin.[15] Growing political bitterness surfaced again. The government and its supporters, the Popular Front, had launched a campaign against the Opposition whom they accused of plotting against the Republic. The Opposition parties, on the other hand, had reacted with increasing vigour. The latter claimed that the Popular Front had illegally obtained two hundred seats in a Parliament of 473 members. After the loss of 200 seats, the Opposition Parties claimed the government represented only a small minority, adding claims that the Popular Front's parliamentary majority was the result of large-scale electoral fraud, of Government-sponsored mob terror and intimidation, of the arbitrary annulment of all election certificates in many Right-wing constituencies, and of the expulsion, the arrest, or even the assassination, of many legally elected deputies of the Right. According to the Opposition, the real enemies of the Republic were not on the Right but on the Left; Spain was in imminent danger of falling under a Communist dictatorship, and therefore by fighting the Popular Front they, the Opposition, were merely doing their duty in defence of law and order and of the freedom and the fundamental rights of the Spanish people.[16]

The days after the election were marked by near-chaotic circumstances. Franco lobbied unsuccessfully to have a state of emergency declared, with the stated purpose of quelling the disturbances and allowing an orderly vote recount.[citation needed]
Instead, on 23 February, Franco was sent to the distant Canary Islands to serve as the islands' military commander, a position in which he had few troops under his command.
Meanwhile, a conspiracy led by Emilio Mola was taking shape. In June, Franco was contacted and a secret meeting was held in Tenerife's La Esperanza Forest to discuss a military coup. (A commemorative obelisk commemorating this historic meeting can be found in a clearing at Las Raíces.)
Outwardly, Franco maintained an ambiguous attitude almost up until July. On June 23, 1936, he wrote to the head of the government, Casares Quiroga, offering to quell the discontent in the army, but was not answered. The other rebels were determined to go ahead, con Paquito o sin Paquito (with Franco or without him), as it was put by José Sanjurjo, the honorary leader of the military uprising. After various postponements, July 18 was fixed as the date of the uprising. The situation reached a point of no return and, as presented to Franco by Mola, the coup was unavoidable and he had to choose a side. He decided to join the rebels and was given the task of commanding the Army of Africa. A privately owned DH 89 De Havilland Dragon Rapide, was chartered in England July 11 to take Franco to Africa.
The assassination of the right-wing opposition leader José Calvo Sotelo by government police troops, possibly acting on their own in retaliation for the murder of José Castillo, precipitated the uprising. On July 17, one day earlier than planned, the African Army rebelled, detaining their commanders. On July 18, Franco published a manifesto[17] and left for Africa, where he arrived the next day to take command.
A week later, the rebels, who soon called themselves the Nationalists, controlled only a third of Spain, and most navy units remained under control of the Republican loyalist forces, which left Franco isolated. The coup had failed, but the Spanish Civil War had begun.

[edit]
From the Spanish Civil War to World War II
Main articles: Spanish Civil War and Spain in World War II
The Spanish Civil War began in July 1936 and officially ended with Franco's victory in April 1939, leaving 190,000[18] to 500,000[19] dead. Despite the Non-Intervention Agreement of August 1936, the war was marked by foreign intervention on behalf of both sides, leading to international repercussions. The nationalist side was supported by Fascist Italy, which sent the Corpo Truppe Volontarie and later Nazi Germany, which assisted with the Condor Legion infamous for their bombing of Guernica in April 1937. Britain and France strictly adhered to the arms embargo, provoking dissensions within the French Popular Front coalition led by Léon Blum, but the Republican side was nonetheless supported by volunteers fighting in the International Brigades and the Soviet Union. (See for example Ken Loach's Land and Freedom.)

Because Hitler and Stalin used the war as a testing ground for modern warfare, some historians, such as Ernst Nolte, have considered the Spanish Civil War, along with the Second World War, part of a "European Civil War" lasting from 1936 to 1945 and characterized mainly as a Left/Right ideological conflict. However, this interpretation has not found acceptance among most historians, who consider the Second World War and the Spanish Civil War two distinct conflicts. Among other things, they point to the political heterogeneity on both sides (See Spanish Civil War: Other Factions in the War) and criticize a monolithic interpretation which overlooks the local nuances of Spanish history.

The first months
Despite Franco having no money, while the state treasury was in Madrid with the government, there was an organized economic lobby in London looking after his financial needs with Lisbon as their operational base. Eventually, he was to receive important help from his economic and diplomatic boosters abroad.
Following the 18 July 1936, pronunciamento, Franco assumed the leadership of the 30,000 soldiers of the Spanish Army of Africa. The first days of the insurgency were marked with a serious need to secure control over the Spanish Moroccan Protectorate. On one side, Franco managed to win the support of the natives and their (nominal) authorities, and, on the other, to ensure his control over the army. This led to the summary execution of some 200 senior officers loyal to the Republic (one of them his own first cousin). Also his loyal bodyguard was shot by a man known as Manuel Blanco. [20] Franco's first problem was how to move his troops to the Iberian Peninsula, since most units of the Navy had remained in control of the Republic and were blocking the Strait of Gibraltar. He requested help from Mussolini, who responded with an unconditional offer of arms and planes; Wilhelm Canaris, the head of the Abwehr military intelligence, persuaded Hitler, as well, to support the Nationalists. From July 20 onward he was able, with a small group of 22 mainly German Junkers Ju 52 airplanes, to initiate an air bridge to Seville, where his troops helped to ensure the rebel control of the city. Through representatives, Franco started to negotiate with the United Kingdom, Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy for more military support, and above all for more airplanes. Negotiations were successful with the last two on July 25, and airplanes began to arrive in Tetouan on August 2. On August 5, Franco was able to break the blockade with the newly arrived air support, successfully deploying a ship convoy with some 2,000 soldiers.

In early August, the situation in western Andalusia was stable enough to allow him to organize a column (some 15,000 men at its height), under the command of then Lieutenant-Colonel Juan Yagüe, which would march through Extremadura towards Madrid. On August 11, Mérida was taken, and on August 15 Badajoz, thus joining both nationalist-controlled areas. Additionally, Mussolini ordered a voluntary army, the Corpo Truppe Volontarie (CTV) of some 12,000 Italians of fully motorized units to Seville and Hitler added to them a professional squadron from the Luftwaffe (2JG/88) with about 24 planes. All these planes had the Nationalist Spanish insignia painted on them, but were flown by Italian and German troops. The backbone of Franco's aviation in those days were the Italian SM.79 and SM.81 bombers, the biplane Fiat CR.32 fighter and the German Junkers Ju 52 cargo-bomber and the Heinkel He 51 biplane fighter.
On 21 September, with the head of the column at the town of Maqueda (some 80 km away from Madrid), Franco ordered a detour to free the besieged garrison at the Alcázar of Toledo, which was achieved September 27. This controversial decision gave the Popular Front time to strengthen its defenses in Madrid and hold the city that year but was an important morale and propaganda success.

Rise to power
The designated leader of the uprising, Gen. José Sanjurjo died on July 20 1936 in an air crash. Therefore, in the nationalist zone, "Political life ceased."[21] Initially, only military command mattered; this was divided into regional commands (Emilio Mola in the North, Gonzalo Queipo de Llano in Seville commanding Andalusia, Franco with an independent command and Miguel Cabanellas in Zaragoza commanding Aragon). The Spanish Army of Morocco itself was split into two columns, one commanded by General Juan Yagüe and the other commanded by Colonel José Varela.
From 24 July, a coordinating junta was established, based at Burgos. Nominally led by Cabanellas, as the most senior general,[22] it initially included Mola, three other generals, and two colonels; Franco was added in early August.[23] On September 21, it was decided that Franco was to be commander-in-chief (this unified command was opposed only by Cabanellas),[24] and, after some discussion, with no more than a lukewarm agreement from Queipo de Llano and from Mola, also head of government.[25] He was doubtless helped to this primacy by the fact that, in late July, Hitler had decided that all of Germany's aid to the nationalists would go to Franco.[26]
Mola considered Franco as unfit and not part of the initial rebel group.[citation needed] But Mola himself had been somewhat discredited as the main planner of the attempted coup that had now degenerated into a civil war, and was strongly identified with the Carlists monarchists and not at all with the Falange, a party with Fascist leanings and connections, nor did he have good relations with Germans; Queipo de Llano and Cabanellas had both previously rebelled against the dictatorship of Miguel Primo de Rivera and were therefore discredited in some nationalist circles; and Falangist leader José Antonio Primo de Rivera was in prison in Madrid (he would be executed a few months later) and the desire to keep a place open for him prevented any other falangist leader from emerging as a possible head of state. Franco's previous aloofness from politics meant that he had few active enemies in any of the factions that needed to be placated, and had cooperated in recent months with both Germany and Italy.[27] On 1 October 1936, in Burgos, Franco was publicly proclaimed as Generalísimo of the National army and Jefe del Estado (Head of State).[28] Mola was furious and Cabanellas intervened to calm the spirits down.[citation needed] When Mola was killed in another air accident a year later (which some believe was an assassination) (June 2, 1937), no military leader was left from those who organized the conspiracy against the Republic between 1933 and 1935.[29]

Military command
From that time until the end of the war, Franco personally guided military operations. After the failed assault on Madrid in November 1936, Franco settled to a piecemeal approach to winning the war, rather than bold maneuvering. As with his decision to relieve the garrison at Toledo, this approach has been subject of some debate; some of his decisions, such as, in June 1938, when he preferred to head for Valencia instead of Catalonia, remain particularly controversial from a military viewpoint. It was however, in Valencia, Castellon and Alicante where the last troops were defeated by Franco Franco's army was supported by Nazi Germany in the form of the Condor Legion, infamous for the bombing of Guernica on April 26, 1937. These German forces also provided maintenance personnel and trainers, and some Germans and Italians served over the entire war period in Spain. Principal assistance was received from Fascist Italy (Corpo Truppe Volontarie), but the degree of influence of both powers on Franco's direction of the war seems to have been very limited. Nevertheless, the Italian troops, despite not being always effective, were present in most of the large operations in big numbers, while the CTV helped the Nationalist airforce dominate the skies for most of the war. António de Oliveira Salazar's Portugal also openly assisted the Nationalists from the start, contributing some 20,000 troops.
It is said that Franco's direction of the Nazi and Fascist forces was limited, particularly in the direction of the Condor Legion, however, he was officially, by default, their supreme commander and they rarely made decisions on their own. For reasons of prestige, it was decided to continue assisting Franco until the end of the war, and Italian and German troops paraded on the day of the final victory in Madrid.[30]

[edit]
Political command
In April 1937, Franco managed to fuse the ideologically incompatible national-syndicalist Falange ("phalanx", a far-right Spanish political party founded by José Antonio Primo de Rivera) and the Carlist monarchist parties under a single-party under his rule, dubbed Falange Española Tradicionalista y de las Juntas de Ofensiva Nacional-Sindicalista (FET y de las JONS), which became the only legal party in 1939. The Falangists' hymn, Cara al Sol, became the semi-national anthem of Franco's not yet established regime.

This new political formation appeased the pro-Nazi Falangists while tempering them with the anti-German Carlists. Franco's brother-in-law Ramón Serrano Súñer, who was his main political advisor, was able to turn the various parties under Franco against each other to absorb a series of political confrontations against Franco himself. At a certain moment he even expelled the original leading members of both the Carlists (Manuel Fal Conde) and the Falangists (Manuel Hedilla) to secure Franco's political future. Franco also appeased the Carlists by exploiting the Republicans' anti-clericalism in his propaganda, in particular concerning the "Martyrs of the war". While the loyalist forces presented the war as a struggle to defend the Republic against Fascism, Franco depicted himself as the defender of "Christian Europe" against "atheist Communism."
From early 1937, every death sentence had to be signed (or acknowledged) by Franco. From the beginning of the revolt, all the Junta generals ordered massive public and summary executions to spread fear and reduce resistance among the civilians.

[edit]
The end of the Civil War
Before the fall of Catalonia in February 1939, the Prime Minister of Spain Juan Negrín unsuccessfully proposed, in the meeting of the Cortes in Figueres, capitulation with the sole condition of respecting the lives of the vanquished. Negrín was ultimately deposed by Colonel Segismundo Casado, later joined by José Miaja.
Thereafter, only Madrid (see History of Madrid) and a few other areas remained under control of the government forces. On February 27, Chamberlain and Daladier's governments recognized the Franco regime, before the official end of the war. The PCE attempted a mutiny in Madrid with the aim of re-establishing Negrín's leadership, but José Miaja retained control. Finally, on March 28, 1939, with the help of pro-Franco forces inside the city (the "fifth column" General Mola had mentioned in propaganda broadcasts in 1936), Madrid fell to the Nationalists. The next day, Valencia, which had held out under the guns of the Nationalists for close to two years, also surrendered. Victory was proclaimed on April 1, 1939, when the last of the Republican forces surrendered. On this very date, Franco placed his sword upon the altar in a church and in a vow, promised that he would never again take up his sword unless Spain itself was threatened with invasion.
At least 50,000 people were executed during the civil war.[19][31][32] Franco's victory was followed by thousands of summary executions (from 15,000 to 25,000 people [33]) and imprisonments, while many were put to forced labour, building railways, drying out swamps, digging canals (La Corchuela, the Canal of the Bajo Guadalquivir), construction of the Valle de los Caídos monument, etc. The 1940 shooting of the president of the Catalan government, Lluís Companys, was one of the most notable cases of this early suppression of opponents and dissenters.

Although leftists suffered from an important death-toll, the Spanish intelligentsia, atheists and military and government figures who had remained loyal to the Madrid government during the war were also targeted for oppression.

In his recent, updated history of the Spanish Civil War, Antony Beevor "reckons Franco's ensuing 'white terror' claimed 200,000 lives. The 'red terror' had already killed 38,000."[34] Julius Ruiz concludes that "although the figures remain disputed, a minimum of 37,843 executions were carried out in the Republican zone with a maximum of 150,000 executions (including 50,000 after the war) in Nationalist Spain."[35] In Checas de Madrid, César Vidal comes to a nationwide total of 110,965 victims of Republican violence; 11,705 people being killed in Madrid alone.[36]

Despite the official end of the war, guerrilla resistance to Franco (known as "the maquis") was widespread in many mountainous regions, and continued well into the 1950s. In 1944, a group of republican veterans, which also fought in the French resistance against the Nazis, invaded the Val d'Aran in northwest Catalonia, but they were quickly defeated.

The end of the war led to hundreds of thousands of exilees, mostly to France (but also Mexico, Chile, Cuba, the USA and so on.).[37] On the other side of the Pyrenees, refugees were confined in internment camps of the French Third Republic, such as Camp Gurs or Camp Vernet, where 12,000 Republicans were housed in squalid conditions (mostly soldiers from the Durruti Division [38]). The 17,000 refugees housed in Gurs were divided into four categories (Brigadists, pilots, Gudaris and ordinary 'Spaniards'). The Gudaris (Basques) and the pilots easily found local backers and jobs, and were allowed to quit the camp, but the farmers and ordinary people, who could not find relations in France, were encouraged by the Third Republic, in agreement with the Francoist government, to return to Spain. The great majority did so and were turned over to the Francoist authorities in Irún. From there they were transferred to the Miranda de Ebro camp for "purification" according to the Law of Political Responsibilities.

After the proclamation by Marshal Philippe Pétain of the Vichy France regime, the refugees became political prisoners, and the French police attempted to round-up those who had been liberated from the camp. Along with other "undesirables", they were sent to the Drancy internment camp before being deported to Nazi Germany. 5,000 Spaniards thus died in Mauthausen concentration camp [39]. The Chilean poet Pablo Neruda, who had been named by the Chilean President Pedro Aguirre Cerda special consul for immigration in Paris, was given responsibility for what he called "the noblest mission I have ever undertaken": shipping more than 2,000 Spanish refugees, who had been housed by the French in squalid camps, to Chile on an old cargo ship, the Winnipeg.

[edit]
World War II

In September 1939, World War II broke out in Europe, and although Hitler met Franco once in Hendaye, France (October 23, 1940), to discuss Spanish entry on the side of the Axis, Franco's demands (food, military equipment, Gibraltar, French North Africa, Portugal, etc.) proved too much and no agreement was reached. (An oft-cited remark attributed to Hitler is that the German leader would rather have some teeth extracted than to have to deal further with Franco.) Franco's tactics received important support from Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini during the civil war. He remained emphatically neutral in the Second World War, but nonetheless offered various kinds of support to Italy and Germany. He allowed Spanish soldiers to volunteer to fight in the German Army against the USSR (the Blue Division), but forbade Spaniards to fight in the West against the democracies. Franco's common ground with Hitler was particularly weakened by Hitler's propagation of a pseudo-pagan mysticism and his attempts to manipulate Christianity, which went against Franco's deep commitment to defending Christianity and Catholicism.[citation needed]Contributing to the disagreement was an ongoing dispute over German mining rights in Spain. Some historians argue that Franco made demands that he knew Hitler would not accede to in order to stay out of the war. Other historians argue that he, as leader of a destroyed country in chaos, simply had nothing to offer the Germans and their military. Yet, after the collapse of France in June 1940, Spain did adopt a pro-Axis non-belligerency stance (for example, he offered Spanish naval facilities to German ships) until returning to complete neutrality in 1943 when the tide of the war had turned decisively against Germany and its allies. Some volunteer Spanish troops (the División Azul, or "Blue Division")—not given official state sanction by Franco—went to fight on the Eastern Front under German command from 1941–1943. Some historians have argued that not all of the Blue Division were true volunteers and that Franco expended relatively small but significant resources to aid the Axis powers' battle against the Soviet Union.
During the entire war, especially after 1942, the Spanish borders were more or less kept open for Jewish refugees from Vichy France and Nazi-occupied territories in Europe. Franco's diplomats extended their diplomatic protection over Sephardic Jews in Hungary, Slovakia and the Balkans. Spain was a safe haven for all Jewish refugees and antisemitism was not official policy under the Franco regime.
On June 14, 1940, the Spanish forces in Morocco occupied Tangier (a city under the rule of the League of Nations) and did not leave it until 1945.

[edit]
Spain under Franco

Main article: Spain under Franco

Franco was recognized as the Spanish head of state by Britain and France in February 1939, two months before the war officially ended. Already proclaimed Generalísimo of the Nationalists and Jefe del Estado (Head of State) in October 1936 [28], he thereafter assumed the official title of "Su Excelencia el Jefe de Estado" ("His Excellency the Head of State"). However, he was also referred to in state and official documents as "Caudillo de España" ("the Leader of Spain"), and sometimes called "el Caudillo de la Última Cruzada y de la Hispanidad" ("the Leader of the Last Crusade and of the Hispanic World") and "el Caudillo de la Guerra de Liberación contra el Comunismo y sus Cómplices" ("the Leader of the War of Liberation Against Communism and Its Accomplices").

In 1947, Franco proclaimed Spain a monarchy, but did not designate a monarch. This gesture was largely done to appease the Movimiento Nacional (Carlists and Alfonsists). Although a self-proclaimed monarchist himself, Franco had no particular desire for a King yet, and as such, he left the throne vacant, with himself as de facto Regent. He wore the uniform of a Captain General (a rank traditionally reserved for the King) and resided in the El Pardo Palace. In addition, he appropriated the royal privilege of walking beneath a canopy, and his portrait appeared on most Spanish coins and postage stamps. He also added "by the grace of God," a phrase usually part of the styles of monarchs, to his style.

Franco initially sought support from various groups. He initially garnered support from the fascist elements of the Falange, but distanced himself from fascist ideology after the defeat of the Axis in World War II. Franco's administration marginalized fascist ideologues in favor of technocrats, many of whom were linked with Opus Dei, who promoted the economic modernization under Franco[40].

Although Franco and Spain under his rule adopted some trappings of fascism, he, and Spain under his rule, are not generally considered to be fascist; among the distinctions, fascism entails a revolutionary aim to transform society, where Franco and Franco's Spain did not seek to do so, and, to the contrary, although authoritarian, were conservative and traditional.[41][42][43][44][45] Stanley Payne, the preeminent conservative scholar on fascism and Spain notes: "scarcely any of the serious historians and analysts of Franco consider the generalissimo to be a core fascist". [44][46] The consistent points in Franco's long rule included above all authoritarianism, nationalism, the defense of Catholicism and the family, anti-Freemasonry, and anti-Communism.

The aftermath of the Civil War was socially bleak: many of those who had supported the Republic fled into exile. Spain lost thousands of doctors, nurses, teachers, lawyers, judges, professors, businessmen, artists,etc. Many of those who had to stay lost their jobs or lost their rank. Sometimes those jobs were given to unskilled and even untrained personnel. This deprived the country of many of its brightest minds, and also of a very capable workforce.[citation needed]. However, this was done to keep Spain's citizens consistent with the ideals sought by the Nationalists and Franco.

With the end of World War II, Spain suffered from the economic consequences of its isolation from the international community. This situation ended in part when, due to Spain's strategic location in light of Cold War tensions, the United States entered into a trade and military alliance with Spain. This historic alliance commenced with United States President Eisenhower's visit in 1953 which resulted in the Pact of Madrid. Spain was then admitted to the United Nations in 1955.

• Socialism and Nazism
Nazism and socialism refers to a polemical, and political claim that Nazism, or the "German National Socialism" of the 1930s to mid 1940s is comparable in some way to the ideology of socialism. Political figures —in the US, Britain, and elsewhere —may at times employ the comparison as a rhetorical device aimed at discrediting pro-labor and otherwise socially liberal platforms, by implying a guilt by association between socialist economic philosophy and the tyrannical rule of Adolf Hitler and the Nazis.
While the claim has little meaning among educated scholars, the argument has some social resonance among "layman majorities" who tend to be less able to discern (or have less access to) factual claims and materials related to history and economics —easy to sway with polemic rhetoric, even if the claim has little substance or merit.

The definition of Nazism
The name "National Socialist German Workers Party," was a misnomer, much like the "Peoples Republic of China," the "Union of Soviet Socialist Republics," the "German Democratic Republic" and the "Liberal Democratic Party of Russia." Few would argue that any of the above countries were infact democracies or republics, and it is to this above category that the Hitlerian self-image as a "National Socialist German Workers Party," belongs.
The shortened term, "National Socialism," is a misnomer as well, and by itself simply means a 'nationalist flavor of socialism.' But because it is a very general term, it has some current resonance in popular discourse —particularly when it's used synonymously with Nazism.
It's polemical use within Western capitalist societies, is designed to evoke the twin demons of Naziism and (Soviet) "socialism," perhaps generating a Pavlovian response to the common "enemy", in this case .
The accusation of political liberals as "socialists," (and hence by implication "Nazis" and "Soviets Communists") is a rather typical and well-documented cornerstone of conservative rhetoric in the United States and other capitalist democracies. (See smear campaign, Red scare, McCarthyism)
The Nazi party-appropriated-term "socialism," like "democracy" in the cases above, was used to appeal to German workers for political support during the tentative early years of Hitler's ascent to power.

Apart from the occasional use of empty pro-worker political rhetoric, Adolf Hitler and his Nazi party had no inclination towards true socialism, in the sense (democratic socialism) that it's used today. Within the context of Hitler's unified, "racially-pure" Germany, Hitler instituted and supported social programs that on their surface had socialist structure. For example, his youth programs, education and indoctrination programs, reproduction programs, all borrowed some of their structure from existing "socialist" ideas, but insead of keeping the democratic spirit of socialist ideals, he simply borrowed what was popular to serve is quest for power. Whatever appeals Nazism made to the German worker, family, culture, and society —while in a very general sense were socialist —they were simply components in the totalitarian rule of the Nazi party.
The claim that socialism and nazism are one in the same are an example of the ignatoriao ilenchi fallacy —for example, the same could be said of the United States military industrial complex, which operates with socialist/communist-like safeguards and protections, though its a part of a capitalist system.

Ad-Hominem
The term Nazism typically has such a bad name that to link it to anything tends to tarnish the reputation of that other thing. A "law" of internet culture called Godwin's Law humorously states that whoever first brings up Hitler or the Nazis in a usenet discussion automatically loses the argument.
[1] [2] (tarring them with the same brush, as it were). Those who see a connection insist that rather then being driven by ideology, they seek only greater accuracy in political science.

Reasons Nazism is considered socialist

• Self-depiction: the German Nazi Party called itself the "National Socialist Worker's Party", and in 1927, Hitler said, "We are socialists."
•
• The Left Wing (examples include Gregor Strasser and Ernst Röhm), and working class brownshirts (or Sturmabteilung) within the Nazi Party supported socialist programs.
•
• One writer, Lew Rockwell at the Ludwig von Mises Institute, suggests that the chief difference beween Nazism and (as he puts it) others forms of socialism is that the Hitler's socialism was nationalistic while other forms (such as Communism) were internationalist. [3]

Reasons Nazism is not considered socialist

• Throughout its rise to power and rule, the Nazis were strongly opposed by left-wing and socialist parties, and Nazi rhetoric was virulently anti-Marxist, attacking both communists and social democrats. A central appeal of Nazism was its opposition to Marxism and other forms of socialism and its claim to be a bulwark against Bolshevism and this is why they recieved so much material and political support from industrialists and conservatives.

• The Nazi ideology saw socialist collectivism as part of a Jewish conspiracy (Judeo-Bolshevism) meant to undermine the elitist principle.
•
• Nazis proposed that only people who were considered "racially pure" or Aryan would benefit from their policies. This can be seen as contrary to the socialist ideal of a society for the benefit of all.
• In his rise to power, Hitler reassured German industrialists that he would respect private property and fight labor unions. To the extent that permitting private property to exist is contrary to "socialism", then Nazism was not "socialist". On the other hand, some democratic countries (like Sweden) have adopted some (but not all) socialist ideas while retaining a degree of freedom to own private property and have labor unions.
•
• Hitler received strong support from conservatives for the "Enabling Act." This legislation was opposed by social democrats.
•
• After coming to power, Hitler sent thousand of communists, social democrats and unionists to concentration camps and killed communist leaders in Germany. He outlawed labor unions and guaranteed corporate profits for Krupp & Co.
•
• The profits of large corporations soared under the Nazis. With the exception of Jewish property which was seized and sold, capitalist enterprises were not expropriated or nationalised but remained in private hands.
•
• The Nazis were anti-egalitarian believing in neither equality (either among Germans or between Germans and non-Germans), collectivism, nor the rights of the "masses". According to Hitler biographer Ian Kershaw they had an elitist view of society and asserted that in competition with each other the superior individual would emerge on top. Despite the use of slogans such as "the common good comes before the private good" their vision of social relations, in practice, was in line with the ideas of Nietzche rather than Karl Marx.
• During the party's ascendency in the 1930s, so called "left wing" Nazis such as Gregor Strasser and Ernst Röhm were ruthlessly purged and even killed.

i realize that this is most probably a waste of time. your type, are almost un-educational. as mussolini stated, fascism should be renamed corporatism.

What Fascism Is & Isn't

No other word causes so much misunderstanding, confusion, and heated debate in politics than fascism. The term has been applied to many individuals such as McCarthy, Hoover, and others. It is frequently used to describe government policies and government themselves, often incorrectly. What then is fascism exactly? Webster's Dictionary defines it as: "A government system marked by a centralized dictatorship, stringent socioeconomic controls and belligerent nationalism." But the author takes exception with that definition. At best, the definition is vague and abstract. Nor does the definition seem capable of taking into all forms of fascism.
There is a resurgent, widespread attempt by the far right to label fascism as a form of socialism. Fredrick von Hayek was the first to attempt labeling the Nazis as socialists in his book The Road to Serfdom published in 1944.70 The hard right quickly adopted it, as it allowed the hard right to escape the charges that they had much in common with the Nazis.2 Such endeavors are not only silly, but dishonest as well and represent an attempt by the far right to distance themselves for their earlier support of Hitler.
Hayek's book is based on two erroneous assumptions from the very beginning. He first assumes that fascism and communism are one and the same, as they are both totalitarian systems. This makes about as much sense as calling a maple tree a pine tree because both are trees. His second erroneous assumption lays in his belief that only socialism or liberalism leads to totalitarian systems. In fact, all political systems can lead to totalitarian systems and all political systems are inherently unstable, as is any system created by man.
From there, Hayek takes severe liberties with history. For instance, he goes on to claim that by deliberate policy the United States by allowed the growth of cartels and syndicates after 1878.71 Indeed this date and time period is significant, but not for a move towards socialism or liberalism. Rather, it's the opposite a move towards fascism and corporate rule. Even a reader with a rudimentary knowledge of American history would recognize this time frame as the beginning of the robber baron era and laissez faire economics, precisely the type of economic policy Hayek holds in utmost esteem.

Hayek offers little proof to support his conclusions; in fact the book is devoid of any proof or even examples to support his findings. The book degenerates into an argument based upon unsubstantiated assertion. He argues against the nation state and proposes a supernational authority or world federation made up of the financial elite. In essence, Hayek proposes a world made up of sovereign corporations accountable to no one. Not only did Hayek take severe liberties with American history, he ignored the very nature of fascism in Germany and Italy.
In various speeches made shortly after the March on Rome, Mussolini stated, "We must take from state authority those functions for which it is incompetent and which it performs badly... I believe the state should renounce its economic functions, especially those carried out through monopolies, because the state is incompetent in such matters... We must put an end to state railways, state postal service and state insurance." The state returned large monopolies to the private sector after returning them to profitability such as the Consortium of Match Manufactures, privatized the insurance system in 1923, the telephone system in 1925, and many of the public works.
In Germany the Nazis announced they would end nationalization of private industries when they seized power. In 1932, Hitler returned control of the Gelsenkirhen company to private hands and in 1936 returned the stock of "United Steel" to private hands. Throughout 1933-1936, the Nazi returned to private hands the control of several banks: Dresdner, Danat, Commerz and Privatbank, the Deutsche Bank, and several others. In 1936, the steamship company Deutcher Schiff and Maschinenbau was returned to the private sector. In 1934, Dr. Schacht, the Nazi Minister of Economy, gave instructions to hasten the privatization of municipal enterprises. These enterprises were especially coveted by the rich industrialists, as they had been prosperous even during the depression.
Both in fascist Italy and Nazi Germany, the tax system was changed to one favoring business and the wealthy. The Nazis allowed industries to deduct from their taxable income all sums used to purchase new equipment. Rich families employing a maid were allowed to count the maid as a dependent child and reap the tax benefit. In Italy, the Minister of Finance stated: "We have broken with the practice of persecuting capital."73
Such programs, catering to big business and the rich elite, are more akin to the policies of the Reagan Administration than it is to any liberal administration including FDR's. Likewise, it was the rich industrialists that were behind the fascist movement in the United States during the 1930s. Thus it is no surprise that the right wing attempts to try and label fascism as socialism in trying to distance themselves from their previous support of fascism.
Perhaps the only redeeming feature in Hayek's book is his acknowledgement of environmental problems.72 Indeed this is significant, considering the book was first published in the 1940s, long before the birth of the environmental movement. Hayek readily acknowledges the problem of industrial pollution and the harmful effects of deforestation, yet he stops short of any meaningful solution. Instead of offering a viable solution Hayek condemns government regulation and would allow market forces to provide the solution. However, it was these same market forces that produced the problem. We have plenty of proof of such a fool hearty approach both here and globally. As late as the 1970s rivers caught fire in the United States, cities were smog stricken and harmful pollutants were damaging the environment world wide. Today we face the problems of global warming and ozone depletion, and the problem of environmental estrogens, which has the potential of being even more threatening than both global warming and ozone depletion.

But perhaps the most damning of all evidence that Hayek was dead wrong comes from the implementation of an economic system based on his beliefs. Hayek later taught at the University of Chicago, the same university that trained the "Boys from Chicago" who were the economic brains behind the fascist regime of Pinochet in Chile. There is no question in the matter that under Pinochet, Chile was indeed fascist. More alarming, Hayek is an idol to several top-level officials in the George W. Bush administration. They are dangerous close to imposing a fascist style economy on the United States.

In order to dispel the myth of the Nazis being socialists we need to first define socialism. Socialism is rigidly defined as an economic system in which the workers own the means of production and distribution of goods. A more relaxed definition would be simply that the workers maintain political control over the production and distribution of goods. Even using the more relaxed definition of socialism, the Nazis can not be labeled as socialists as there simply was no worker control over the production or distribution of goods in Nazi Germany. In fact, the Nazis outlawed legitimate labor unions. In place of the original unions, the Nazis implemented quasi-like unions that were controlled by the industrialists. In a déjà vu manner, the Republican Party has recently tried to enact a similar measure, conferring legal status on worker groups controlled by corporations. Some writers and historians have argued that you cannot have fascism without corporatism, as the corporate power structure has much in common with fascism. During the period preceding the outbreak of WWII it was common to refer to fascism as corporatism in polite English society.

More recently others have tried to define fascism as the "Third Way", in the sense that it borrowed ideas from both capitalism and socialism. The basic philosophy behind the "Third Way" incorrectly labels any regulations or government controls over businesses as socialism; essentially it's just a restatement of syndicalism. Such nonsense should be rejected whole heartily. It again represents an attempt to distance the right from their support of Hitler in the 1930s and ignores that the basis of the German economy under Hitler was a capitalist system where the means of production remained in private hands. Further, following the logic of the "Third Way," one would have to label all capitalistic systems as "Third Way," for throughout history there has never been a pure capitalistic system. A pure capitalist economy is so inherently and fatally flawed that it's never even been tried. But that is to be expected for any system that awards the winner with all the eggs. Nor has there been a pure socialistic system. Human greed simply prevents it.

The dangers of such nonsense can be illustrated with the following quote taken from a Baptists fundamentalist's web page in their labeling of the Japanese economy as fascist: However, Fascism is an economic term, denoting the type of economy where the Means of Production [factories, companies] and the ownership of raw materials [mines, oil wells] remains in the hands of private individuals, but where the government intervenes to determine how many competitors will be allowed to produce the same thing, how much is produced, and what prices may be charged.1

Here it can be seen that the term fascism has been clearly misapplied. This description could past for the economic theory of the fascist philosopher George Sorel. This is a description of syndicalism; it was the economic model of fascist Italy and Nazi Germany to a large extent. Syndicalism does draw some aspects from socialism, but the system is still a capitalistic system as ownership of the means of production and distribution of goods remain in private hands. It is no more socialism than the conclusion of the Robber Barons and the corrupt politicians of Tammy Hall. The only difference between this example of syndicalism is that the government participation is open versus the backroom corruption of politicians in Tammy Hall.

Not only Japan invoke syndicalism, but almost all the Pacific Rim nations do, to some extent. These are the same nations that the hard right has held up in the past as darlings of capitalism and free enterprise. Yet these are precisely the same economic policies of the Nazis that they have tried to foist off as socialism. The key distinction here is the means of production still remains in private hands, just as it did in Nazi Germany. No capitalistic society has ever existed without some form of syndicalism or government control over the economy. The closest America came to an entirely capitalistic system was either the 1890s and the Robber Barons or the laissez faire policies of Herbert Hoover, and as we all know, that didn't end too well in the Great Depression of the 1930s.

No where does the quote above refer to totalitarian control or extreme nationalism. In fact, they have tried to define fascism in strictly economic terms for their own purposes. But it does serve to point out the dangers of inventing the "Third Way" or the use of syndicalism in an attempt to label the Nazis. The problem here is determining where syndicalism ends and capitalism begins. Is the trading of pollution credits a form of syndicalism or is it free enterprise? In America today, the hard right would attempt to label it as socialism, as they try to do with any laws or regulations of business. In fact, the past laws regulating corporations were much more severe and restrictive in the 1800s than today. One could argue that it was through syndicalism that the power elite and corporations gradually eroded those laws until corporations now enjoy more freedoms than what an individual enjoys. This is precisely what has happened in America.

But environmental and labor laws are not socialism. They are in fact nothing more than an attempt to bring an out of control system hell bent on exploitation of the environment and labor back to order. No labor law or environment law was ever passed in a vacuum. All of these laws were brought about by a need to correct an unhealthy or unsafe situation. While there are some corporations that strive to provide a clean and safe workplace, there are many whose only concern is the bottom line and they turn a blind eye towards safety and view their employees as expendable commodities.
Regulation of businesses or corporations by itself is not socialism. A business entity such as a corporation has no rights other than what privileges a society wishes to grant it. People have rights; a paper creation of a society such as a corporation has no inherent rights. Business entities such as corporations only have conditional privileges based upon providing for the common good of the society, which granted the charter. All such paper creations have an obligation to serve the society, which created it. Failing to perform that obligation, it loses any right for its continuing existence. It the obligation of that society to restrict the rights of such entities to promote equality for all and to prevent a ruling aristocracy from developing. This view is hardly socialism or even radical, unless one wishes to label Thomas Jefferson as a radical socialist as he more eloquently stated it:
"I hope we shall take warning from the example of England and crush in its birth the aristocracy of our moneyed corporations which dare already to challenge our Government to trial, and bid defiance to the laws of our country."3 Perhaps one of the better definitions of fascism comes from Heywood Broun, a noted American columnist in the 1930s:
"Fascism, is a dictatorship from the extreme right or to put it a little more closely into our local idiom, a government which is run by a small group of large industrialists and financial lords...I think it is not unfair to say that any businessman in America, or public leader, who goes out to break unions is laying the foundations for fascism"75

A definitive definition of fascism is a totalitarian government with extreme nationalist tendencies in which the government is controlled and operated for the benefit of a few elite. However, it should be noted that an all-encompassing definition of a complex system can not be simply stated. Such simple definitions undoubtedly fail in time. A caveat to the above definition would be anytime the government places the rights of corporations or the elite above the rights of the citizens, it represents a step towards fascism. A better insight into what fascism is can be obtained by listing the traits that are common to the classical fascist states of Franco's Spain, Nazi Germany and fascist Italy. A list of traits of fascism is presented below. Note that the first two are the two most defining traits, obviously many of the others can be applied to many other social-political systems as one moves down the list.

1. Totalitarian
2. Extreme nationalism
3. Top down revolution or movement
4. Destructive divisionism such as racism and class warfare
5. Extreme anti-communism, anti socialism, and anti-liberal views
6. Extreme exploitation
7. Opportunistic ideology lacking in consistency as a means to grab power
8. Unbridled Corporatism
9. Reactionary
10. The use of violence and terror to attain and maintain power
11. Cult-like figurehead
12. The expounding of mysticism or religious beliefs

Not all fascists need exhibit all of the traits once again it should be emphasized that all fascist states will exhibit a totalitarian view. Most fascist states will have an extreme nationalism policy. However, extreme nationalism is not mandatory. States such as Spain under Franco and Chile under Pinochet were indeed fascist states, but they could hardly be described as having a policy of extreme nationalism.

A brief look at the above traits and how they relate to fascism will convey a better understanding of what fascism really is, using Nazi Germany as an example. First, because it was undisputedly fascist and secondly because there is more literature available on the Nazis than on either fascist Italy or Franco's Spain. Moreover, the use of the Nazi's as an example is closer to the focus of this book, which is creeping fascism in America.

Creeping fascism is the gradual lost of freedoms of the masses to the power elite. Full-blown fascism has never appeared all at once. The Nazis took several years to reach the final state of full-blown fascism. It took the Nazis five years before Kristallnacht, which marks the beginning of the "Final Solution." The Nazis gradually took away the freedoms of the citizens of Germany until they were able to launch the Holocaust. This was the reason for including the caveat in the definition of fascism above, "Any action taken by the government that places the rights of the elites and corporations above the citizens is a step towards fascism."

Such actions will not look like fascism some may even appear to be reasonable. Its only when the summation of many such actions ends in a fascist state that such actions can be seen as a step towards fascism.

Make no mistake in understanding that the power elite, those that own and run America's corporations, are fascist. They have forced war on this country to protect their assets, they have over-exploited their employees, they have used violence to bust unions, and they rely on divisionist policies such as racism and class warfare to maintain their power.

The erosion of our freedoms in the United States was prolonged by our constitution. Nevertheless, over time the lost of freedoms has left America at the edge of a chasm. Any further loss of freedoms and America will begin an irreversible slide into the deep abyss of fascism.

Before looking at the traits of fascism a brief review of the history of fascism and its roots in modern philosophy is needed. By looking at the roots of fascism in philosophy, we can gain an understanding why fascism is often described as reactionary. By looking at the various philosophers that have come to be associated with fascism, we will be able to see that many of these traits come directly from fascism's roots in philosophy. In that way, we can then see how some of these traits that can be applied to other social-political system are central to fascism.

Many writers have assumed that fascism has no intellectual or philosophical roots due to its lack of a consistent ideology. But such views are incorrect; the roots of fascism extend back to the French Revolution. The French Revolution is one of those landmark events in the history of Europe marking the beginning of a major shift in European culture and governments. In essence, fascism was a reaction to the French revolution. It was a reaction particularly to the slogan of the revolution of "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity" that was hated the most.

The concept of liberty from oppressive regimes in the daily lives of the citizens, including forced religious values, and the concept of voting and majority rule where the minority still retained a set of inalienable rights, incensed the early philosophers of fascism. Such a concept was a direct threat to the kings and nobles of the time, as well as to the church. Remember this was a time for debtor's prisons, indentured servants, and vassal states.

Equality, in the eyes of the law, was unspeakable. How could a mere peasant have the same rights under the law as the kings, nobles, and merchants? This was the time when the king's word was the law. Rights were based on the social standing of one's birth. The only rights a person had at the time were the rights that the king was willing to extend, and they could be withdrawn at any moment.

Fraternity, in the sense that all men and women shared humanity was considered heresy. It was a time when slaves were still considered and treated as animals and women were considered property, and not part of a greater humanity that needed to be shared.

All three terms meant a loss in power and control by those in power. But, this is exactly what the philosophers that have come to be associated with fascism were reacting to and rejecting. The period following the French Revolution produced a virtual intellectual stew of various philosophies, including those of Marx and Engels. A brief look at some of the major philosophers of fascism will show how they relate to the traits listed early, and how they were a reaction to the French Revolution. This list of philosophers is by no means complete, but it will suffice to show that many of the traits attributed to fascism above have roots going back as far as the French Revolution.

Arthur Schopenhauer (1788-1860) was a German philosopher perhaps best known for his The World as Will and Representation.4 His beliefs held that the will is the underlying and ultimate reality. The whole phenomenal world was only the expression of will. Individuals have free will only in the sense that everyone is an expression of a will. Thus we are not authors of our own destiny, character, or behavior, according to Schopenhauer. His views parallel the development of relativistic physics that came a century later. His views were influential on Nietzche, among others.

Georg Hegel (1770-1831), a German philosopher held pantheism as the heart of his beliefs. The Phenomenology of Spirit and Science of Logic are two of his better-known works. He viewed that all existence and all history was divine and that nature was sacred. He viewed God as an absolute spirit that also manifested itself in material things and individuals. He believed God acted through humans and embodied himself first in nature, then in the rising stages of human consciousness and civilization. He also had an ethnocentric and egocentric view. He maintained that the German nation was the highest carrier of the wave of God's development. He believed that the bureaucratic monarchy of Prussia was the highest form of state. These later views were certainly manifested in the Nazi's view of the Aryan race, as shown in the following quote.

"Thus the highest purpose of the folkish state is concern for the preservation of those original racial elements which bestow culture and create the beauty and dignity of a higher mankind. We, as Aryans, can conceive of the state only as the living organism of a nationality which not only assures the preservation of this nationality, but by the development of its spiritual and ideal abilities leads it to the highest freedoms."8

Fredrich Nietzche (1844-1900), also a German philosopher was best known for his work Thus Spake Zarathustra.5 Hitler liked to be photographed staring at a bust of Nietzche. Nietzche theorized two sets of morals, one for the ruling class and another for the slave class. Nietzche viewed that ancient empires grew out of the ruling class and that religions arose out of the slave classes, (which denigrates the rich, the powerful, rationalism, and sexuality.) He developed a concept of an "overman," a superhuman, which symbolized man at his most creative and highest intellectual development. Obviously, the "overman" was manifested in the Nazi's view of the Aryan race. He suffered a mental break down, most likely from the advances of syphilis, and was cared for by his mother and later his sister, Elisabeth. His sister painstakingly gathered his notes to publish his latter works. However, she was active in the rising anti-Semitic movement at the time and may have tainted his later work with her views. From time to time, Nietzsche enjoys a rebirth of popularity. Today is one such rebirth, fitting in well with the unmitigated greed and corporatism of today's hard right. Nietzsche's connection to the Nazis is obvious, as shown by the following quotation.

"with satanic joy in his face, the black haired Jewish youth lurks in wait for the unsuspecting girl whom he defiles with his blood, thus stealing her from her people. With every means he tries to destroy the racial foundations of the people he has set out to subjugate. Just as he himself systematically ruins women and girls, he does not shrink back from pulling down the blood barriers for others, even on a large scale. It was and it is Jews who bring Negroes into the Rhineland, always with the same secret thought and clear aim of ruining the hated white race by necessarily resulting bastardization, throwing it down from its culture and political height, and himself rising to be master."9

Notice the similarity in this passage and the Council of Conservative Citizens that Senator Lott and representative Barr supported before becoming embroiled in the resulting scandal in late 1998.10 The web site for this white supremacist group described interracial marriage to the mixing of chocolate milk with plain milk, and labeled it as a path to racial extinction. They also described Lincoln as a communist. 11

Henri Bergson (1859-1941) was a French philosopher with a Jewish father and an English mother. He was the winner of the Nobel Prize for literature in 1927. He rejected the idea that scientific principles could explain all existence. He was a promoter of what has become known as Social Darwinism.6 Perhaps one of his better known works was Time and Free Will. He was also a believer in pantheism. Once again, we see the obvious connection with the Nazis of a master race in the following quote concerning the Nazi's euthanasia program:

"...a secret circular went out from the Reich interior Ministry which marked the beginning of a programme of euthanasia for mentally ill or deformed children up to three years old. Doctors would be required to report all such cases to the health authority on special forms; the forms would then be forwarded to a panel of three medical assessors who would adjucate over life or death by appending "-" or "+." Should all three place a "+", a euthanasia warrant would be issued, signed by the Reichsleiter Philipp Bouhler of the Fuhrer's Chancellery or SS_Oberfuhrer Dr Viktor Brack, head of the Chancellery's Euthanasia Department II. And so it happened: infants marked for death were transferred to what were referred to as Children's Special Departments in political reliable clinics, there to be given a "mercy death" by injection or in one institution at Eglfing-Haar simply starved by a progressive reduction of diet."7

Geroge Sorel (1847-1922) was a French philosopher who had considerable influence on Mussolini. His writings promoted an economic model based on syndicalism. He also believed in the degeneration of societies and believed that social decay could only be delayed by idealists who were willing to use violence to obtain power. His views were extremely anti-democratic and anti-liberal.

With this very brief review of philosophy has shown that the fascist traits of nationalism, totalitarian, racist, violence, unbridled corporatism, reactionary, and the top down nature of fascism all are grounded in the works of past philosophers.

A totalitarian government is one that seeks to maintain control over all aspects of public and private life by using propaganda, terror, and technology. Totalitarian regimes seek control over political, social, and the culture. However, economic control is left in the hands of a few elites in the fascist state. While the means of economic control is left in the private hands of a few elites, this same group controls the government. In essence the government becomes the tool by which the rich and the corporations maintain control. The distinction is important to note as it separates communism from fascism. In a communist state the control over the economy moves to the inside of government, while in the fascist state it remains in private hands. Dictatorships differ in seeking only limited control over the political environment of a society.

There was only limited government ownership under the Nazis. Prior to the Nazi take over, the German governments took over failing businesses and continued to operate them. When the Nazis took over the government already owned a large number of enterprises. When the Nazis took over they began to privatize many of these businesses, especially the ones that had remained profitable during the depression like the electric utilities.
Once Hitler assured big business that they would be free to continue to operate, they failed to raise any further objections to the Nazis. The large German steel and coal industries especially welcomed the Nazis. Hitler's plans for rearmament meant large contracts for new ships, tanks, etc. Later during the war when a labor shortage appeared, it was Krupp from the German steel industry that first raised the question of using slave labor from the concentration camps. At first the Nazis were reluctant to allow the inmates to be used as slaves as it would slow the progress of the "final solution." However, once Krupp offered to pay for the slaves the Nazis readily agreed and soon there was no shortage of companies seeking slaves.

What is less understood about the totalitarian power Hitler achieved was the path he took to obtain that power. There never has been totalitarian regime that gained instant total control. Such a sudden change would spawn sudden revolutions. Mussolini took three years before consolidating his power in Italy. In case of the Nazis, it took even longer. Nor did the path to totalitarian Nazi state start with the elevation of Hitler to the position of chancellor. Some historians trace the roots of the path all the way back into the 1800s. A complete analysis of German history from the time of the monarchy to the seating of Hitler is beyond the scope of this book, if not beyond the scope of any single book, as volumes could be written. What follows is a very brief look at the slow erosion of freedom and the concentration of power as it relates to the final totalitarian state.
For the most part, the period following WWI was a period dominated by raucous politics and a series of crisis in Germany. The two periods in which the Nazis gained the most strength was the early 1920s, during the hyper inflationary period, culminating with the Beer Hall Putsch and the depression of 1929-1931. There is little need to examine the raucous politics of that period, everyone is well aware of Hitler's SA thugs breaking up political rallies of other parties which also resorted to the same tactics. It would not be untrue to describe many political rallies of the time as ending in brawls.

Hitler and the Nazis were extremists, and mostly rejected by the German voters during the good economic times of the 1920s. For example, in 1928 they only polled 2.6 percent of the vote, gaining just 14 seats out of the 491 seats in the Reichstag by virtue of the republic's proportional representation. By 1930 and the start of the depression, the Nazis had increased their seats to 107 out of 577 seats in the Reichstag. In the July 1932 election, at the height of the depression, the Nazis polled 37.4 percent of the vote winning 230 seats in the Reichstag, becoming Germany's largest party.13 In the Nov 1932 election, they only won 196 seats as an anemic economic recovery was already underway, the people began rejecting the Nazis and their radical views and actions.
Germany's plunge into a totalitarian state began before the Nazis took over. It was as much a result of a lack of a strong leadership as anything else. For the first eleven years of the German Republic there had been seventeen cabinets headed by nine different chancellors.12 Undoubtedly, the country faced grave crisis in this period such as hyperinflation, but the lack of strong leadership and an increased polarization was readily apparent. The Nazis were the most notorious radicals unwilling to compromise, but the other parties have to share some of the blame for this polarization as well. The blame can be extended beyond the parties to the vested interests behind each party, including that of big businesses. Fracturing the electorate by polarization was playing right into the divisionist character of the Nazis, whose radical program lacked a broad base of support as the election results from 1928 showed.
The policies of the German governments during the 1920s inadvertently aided the rise of the Nazis. Throughout the 1920s the government arrested many of the leaders from the left. It would not be unfair to term these arrests as purges. The arrest of any strong leaders emerging from the left only served to further polarize the country by creating a vacuum on the left that was only filled with the more radical communists. A similar situation is emerging in the United States, throughout this century the United States has conducted purges of the left: the Great Red Scare of 1919, McCartyism of the 1950s, and COINTELPRO operations during the sixties. Without the voices from the left to moderate policy, the political center in the United States has shifted to the hard right.
The immediate result in the lack of strong leadership is frequent chances in government, which only lead to more instability and chaos. An ideal parallel is the long string one term Presidents ending with Lincoln and the Civil War. The polarization of the Unite States gradually increased from about 1820 on resulting in one term presidents. Another string of one term Presidents ended with the election of Roosevelt in the middle of the Great Depression. In both U.S. case the ending result was not pleasant: a civil war and a depression.

Such frequent change in government does not allow businesses to make long range plans, nor does it allow for enough to time for programs enacted by a government to work. These effects then act as negative feedback, further increasing the polarization and the resulting chaos.
Additionally, the German constitution was flawed and did not account for a negative parliament. Power in Germany was concentrated in the office of the president, headed by Hindenburg, who initially had been elected by conservatives and reactionary rightists. He was a member of the aristocratics from the Junker class and had been a war hero; he likewise held sentiments for the monarchy. The president had the power to appoint cabinets and chancellors. Beginning in 1930, Hindenburg began the practice of appointing chancellors of his choice that were not beholding to the parliament. To allow the chancellors to circumvent parliament, he granted these chancellors emergency powers that had been given to the president by the constitution. Starting in 1930, almost all national laws, including the power to tax, were enacted by presidential decrees and not by the parliament. Such presidential decrees would be similar to the executive orders in the United States.
Hence, even before Hitler was appointed to the chancellor position, power was being concentrated into the two offices of the chancellor and the president. At least twice before appointing Hitler as chancellor, Hindenburg entertained ideas of violating the constitution by not holding elections within the sixty days as required by the constitution.
Hindenburg had also avoided appoint Hitler as chancellor twice before January 1933. Even with the support of big business Hindeburg failed to appoint Hitler when the Nazis held more seats in the Reichstag than any other party.
It wasn't until after Hitler met in secret with von Pappen at the Cologne home of Baron Kurt von Schroder that Hindenburg would relent and appoint Hitler chancellor. The baron was the head of the international Schroder banking empire and had previously raised funds to pay off the Nazi's debt.
The secret meeting on January 4, 1933 allowed Hitler and von Pappen to work out their differences and to agree to a new cabinet under the direction of both. This secret meeting was the birthplace of the Third Reich.
However, there were two Americans that also were in attendance: John Foster Dulles and his brother Allen. The Dulles brothers were there as legal representatives for Kuhn Loeb Company, which had extended large short term credits to Germany. Their presence was to secure a guarantee of repayment from Hitler.
Moreover, Kurt von Schroder had extensive financial contacts in New York and London. He was a co-director of Thyssen foundry along with Johann Groeninger, Prescott Bush's New York bank partner. Schroeder was also the vice president and director of the Hamburg-Amerika Line, the same shipping line seized from Prescott Bush for trading with the enemy.

Throughout 1932, actions taken by the Bush-Harriman shipping line were directly responsible for bringing Hitler to power. The constitutional government tried to disarm the Nazi Brown Shirts to stop the mad election melees and murders. The U.S. embassy in Berlin reported:
" Hamburg-Amerika Line was purchasing and distributing propaganda attacks against the German government, for attempting this last-minute crackdown on Hitler's forces."
During 1932, Hitler's thugs murdered thousands of Germans. Arms for Hitler were shipped to Germany aboard Hamburg-Amerika Line. They were transferred to river barges before reaching Antwerp and then transported across Holland freely. Samuel Pryor, founder of Union Bank and a partner in the Hamburg-America Line was also executive committee chairman of Remington Arms. Hitler's Brown Shirts were armed primarily with Remington arms and Thompson submachine guns. A Senate investigation of Remington concluded that all of the political factions in Germany were armed with mostly American made guns.
Once Hitler and von Pappen had reached an agreement on their future course of actions. Pappen pressured Hindenburg to appoint Hitler as chancellor. The success of the meeting was recorded in Goebbels. On January 5, 1933 Goebbels wrote in his diary "If this coup succeeds, we are not far from power. . . . Our finances have suddenly improved."
Hindenburg appointed Hitler, as chancellor with the understanding Hitler would be a parliamentary rather than a presidential chancellor. Hitler immediately set about sabotaging the efforts to from a parliamentary majority. Here is one of the first examples of fascism and divisionism.
On February 1, 1933 the German parliament was dissolved and new elections were scheduled for early March. Using his henchmen, Hilter had the Reichstag building burnt. The fire was blamed on the communist, his main revivals. Using the fire as an excuse, Hitler banned the communist from the upcoming election. Additionally, Goring deputized his storm troopers to harass any political opposition from his position in the cabinet; even then the Nazis could not achieve a majority in parliament as they polled only 43.9 votes.14 By summer, all political parties except the Nazis had been dissolved. On the death of Hindenburg in 1934, Hitler assumed the office of president and further consolidated his gripe on power, but it would take a couple of additional years before Hitler was a true totalitarian. He purged the justice system of judges with adverse views, appointing rabid Nazis in their place, and the storm troopers were given police powers. Justice was now the Nazi party line.
One does not need to expound upon the extreme nationalism of the fascist. The history of their invasion in a quest for world dominion is well known. Mussolini turned his attention to Ethiopia and North Africa; Hitler first to Austria, then Czechoslovakia, followed by Western Europe and later to Norway and the east.
Hilter had left a blueprint for his extreme nationalism and the quest for lebensraum in Mien Kampf as shown by the quote below.
"If the National Socialist movement really wants to be consecrated by history with a great mission for our nation, it must be permeated by knowledge and filled with pain at our true situation in this world; boldly and conscious of its goal, it must take up the struggle against the aimlessness and incompetence which have hitherto guided our German nation in the line of foreign affairs. Then without consideration of traditions and prejudices it must find the courage to gather our people and their strength for an advance along the road that will lead this people from its present restricted living space to new land and soil; and hence also free it from danger of vanishing from the earth or of serving others as a slave nation.

The Nationalist Socialist movement must strive to eliminate the disproportion between our population and our area-viewing this later as a source of food as well as a basis for power politics---between our historical past and the helplessness of our present impotence."15

The third trait of fascism is that it consists of a top down revolution or movement. It is becoming more accepted today that the Nazis drew support from all classes. Indeed, this seems a reasonable assumption when looking at all of the evidence. The storm troopers for the most part drew their numbers from the lower and middle classes. They were typically were unemployed laborers, inept middle management, or failed businessmen. Likewise, given the vote tally of over thirty percent in the 1932 elections, the Nazis had to have drawn votes from all social classes. But this has no bearing on who controlled the direction of the party. Control of the party rested solely with Hitler and whom he allied with. He chose to ally with the upper class and big business as borne out by his policies after gaining power. There is little controversy over the considerable support Hitler drew from the aristocrats, the military, or the Junkers.

Telltale signs forewarning of the elite control was evident from the very formation of the party until the final days before gaining power. A brief look at those that financed the Nazis rise to power will reveal the real support behind Hitler. This is becoming an increasing issue of contention as American hard right tries to distance themselves from the similarities of their policies with fascism.

Hitler himself did not form the Nazi party initially. He joined an existing party and then molded it according to his wishes. In fact, his company commander had ordered him to attend a meeting of what was the German Workers Party. Here was Hitler's initial reaction to the party.

>"My impression was neither good or bad; a new organization like so many others. This was the time in which anyone who was not satisfied with developments and no longer had confidence in the existing parties felt called upon to found a new party. Everywhere these organizations sprang from the ground, only to vanish silently after a time. The founders for the most part had no idea what it means to make a party---let alone a movement---out of a club. And so these organizations nearly always stifle automatically in their absurd phillistinism."16

The order from his company commander provides the first evidence that the elite backed Hitler from the very beginning. At any point from this date the German military could have withdrawn its support of Hitler and disbanded the Nazi party

Hitler was a good orator by all reports, as well as an astute political observer. He knew how to motivate the masses in his name and how to sustain a movement. Someone once remarked recently that you needed only gain control of the 3Ms to gain power. The three "Ms" are the military, media, and money. Hitler had all three behind him. As shown by the passage from Mein Kampf, Hitler started with the blessing of the military. The military, as well as big business, played a behind the scenes role in the appointment of Hitler as chancellor. It's the last of the 3Ms where much confusion and debate arise, Hitler's source of funds or money.

Big business likewise had a large hand in bringing down Bruning in 1930. In a large part, it was the constant bickering by special interest groups that led to the falling of Bruning's cabinet. Big business was urging the following demands on the Bruning government:

>1. The government must take steps to lower the cost of production and widen the profit margin.
2. Lower taxes
3. Reduce the size of government.
4. Lower unemployment insurance benefit
5. The government must allow wages to progress to lower levels, by voiding labor contracts and binding arbitration.26

If these demands from the business community seem familiar to the reader, it's because in a large part they are the same policies that the Republican Party has been advocating for the last twenty years.

Throughout the 1920s and up until Hitler was appointed chancellor the Nazi party was plagued with a shortage of money. After release for prison for the failed Beer Hall Putsch, Hitler's only known source of income was from the sale of Mein Kampf and fees for newspaper articles he would write. The first edition of Mein Kampf was published July 18, 1925 in an edition of 10,000 copies selling for 12 marks. By the end of the year almost all copies had been sold. A new edition was printed but sales in the following year plummeted.

Nevertheless, almost immediately after being pardoned he bought a new super-charged Mercedes-Benz for 28,000 marks.17 Additionally, Hitler did not drive, so he had the additional expense of a chauffeur. Likewise, from 1925 until his appointment as chancellor in 1933, Hitler lived in increasing comforts, if not outright lavishness for the times. Certainly, the royalties from Mein Kampf and fees for his other writings were insufficient to cover even his living expenses, not to mention the party's expenses.

Also, the funding for an ever-increasing number of SA troopers (many of which were unemployed) had to be secured. Turner has suggested that the Nazis were self sufficient from dues, speaker's fees, and donations at rallies. However, this seems almost improbable looking at the numbers from 1930. In 1930 there were about 100,000 storm troopers that had to be fed, housed and otherwise supported. Additionally there were 15,000 in the SS. Nazi membership at the beginning of 1931 was only 389,000.18 Thus it seems very reasonable that outside sources of funding was needed to maintain the SA and SS, as well as the ever increasing lifestyle of Hitler. Membership fees in the Nazi party started at a mark per month, non-paying members were quickly dropped from the party.

From the very beginning of the Nazi party Hitler showed a knack for obtaining funding from the more privileged members of German society. For instance, everyone is well aware of the trial following the Beer Hall Putsch, but less well known was a secondary trial following the putsch. In the secondary trial, several businessmen that had donated money or other support for Hitler were put on trial. Some have attributed much of this early funding of the Nazis to the secret Thule Society.19 Another early source of funds in the early 20s came from the efforts of Scheubner-Richter, who was adept at gaining funds from Bavarian aristocrats, big businessmen, bankers, and leaders of heavy industry.20 Another source of early funds came indirectly from Fritz Thyssen. Henry Ford also exerted a considerable influence over Hitler in the early 1920s, as well as money. Some passages from Ford's International Jew are nearly identical to passages in Mein Kampf. Ford's book is reported to have had a large effect on many of the school children of the time that were suffering through hyperinflation and economic hard times while reading a book written by the world's foremost capitalist.

> The extent of Ford's financial donations to Hitler still remains a mystery. The U. S. ambassador to Germany, William Dodd, was quoted saying "certain American industrialists had a great deal to do with bringing fascist regimes into being in both Germany and Italy."21 The extent of corporate America's collaboration with the Nazis before the war and even during the war, in some cases, is not fully known. However, as time goes by and more information becomes available, the collaboration begins to appear significant, as shown in the following article.
"Bernd Greiner said 26 of the top 100 US companies in the 1930s collaborated to some degree with the Nazis before, and in some cases after, Hitler declared war on the United States in December 1941. Company headquarters in the US have denied they knew what was going on in Germany, but there is evidence to suggest they knew their German subsidiaries used slave labor, tolerated it and in some cases were actively involved, Greiner said.
Greiner confirmed a report in the newspaper Die Zeit, based on his findings of US corporate involvement in Nazi Germany. The findings went beyond allegations of US lawyers and historians last year that automakers General Motors and Ford collaborated with the Nazi regime."22
One of the more historically accurate, but shamefully apologetic to big business sources is the book, German Big Business and the Rise of Hitler by Turner.23 Turner does a good job in detailing the extensive participation of the leaders of business with the Nazis. However, he reaches the conclusion that big business did not support Hitler with a rather contrived definition of what big business is. He based his definition on the value of the float of stock on the market. His definition limited the number of companies that he would classify as big business to only 14 companies in the Ruhr industrial area and a smattering of companies located elsewhere. Essentially, his definition would be the equivalent of saying that only the Dow 30 companies in the U. S. could truly be called big business. This of course is nonsense. The majority of people would certainly consider Chrysler, Texas Instruments, Hewitt Packard, John Deere and Chase Manhattan Bank to be big business, but according to Turner's book they are not. It is from this group of second and third tier businesses (in keeping with Turner's definition) that provided the most help and support for Hitler. Furthermore, Turner neglects the effect of cartel agreements as well as subsidiaries in his analysis. Many of these second and third tier corporations were owned and controlled by the 14 corporations, he considered to be big business.

Secondly, Turner focuses much of his attention on the period of 1920-1928, when the Nazis were at best a minor noisy party. During this time, the Nazis were lucky to poll more than three percent of the vote. Yet Turner tries to use this as proof that big business did not support Hitler's rise to power, although he does admit that Fritz Thyssen and Kirdolf were supporters of the Nazis during this time. An equivalent situation would be today's Libertarian Party, a party that draws support from Koch, head of Koch refinery (a second tier company by Turner's reasoning). But no one is rushing to fund the Libertarians today when they cannot even poll five percent of the vote.

Finally, when the source of funds were unquestionably from big business Turner attempts to discredit them by claiming the source of the funds was a junior level executive that couldn't be responsible for overall company policy. Or he attempts to say they were given to an individual Nazi. In one shameful passage Turner attempts to discredit the funds given to Nazi fund-raiser Walther Funk by claiming they were not a donation to the party as they may have been spent by Funk for entertainment. Turner describes a particular drunken binge across town by Funk in which he passed out some rather large tips and then draws the conclusion that perhaps none of the funds given Funk ever reached the Nazis.24 This is not the work of a historian, as Turner claims to be. This is nothing more than conjecture by a propagandist. There is also one other speculative conclusion one could draw from this passage, and that is that the amount of money Funk was receiving was so enormous that it permitted such behavior.

Turner does a good job in showing that it was those second and third tier businesses that supported the Nazis. In Duren, a Rhenish manufacturing town, the Nazis received considerable support from local industrialists such as the millionaire dynasties (a term in use from the 1820s in describing these two families) of the Schoellers and the Schulls. Another area in which the Nazis received broad support from businesses was Solingen, an industrial town.25 Overall, Turner documents the participation of business leaders and their support for the Nazis, leaving no question in the reader's mind that business leaders exerted a considerable influence on the Nazis. Unfortunately, he ends his study just as the Nazis seize power.

Many businesses chose to align with and support the Nazis after they gained power. Krupp and I.G. Faben were both executors' of Goring's Four-Year Plan to make Germany militarily self-sufficient by 1940. One can view the details of Krupp's involvement and support for the Nazis after March 1933 in the documents from the War Crimes Tribunal at Nuremberg.31 The full set of available documents from Nuremberg is also available on the Internet.32 By 1939, I.G. Faben provided the Nazis with 90 percent of their foreign exchange, 95 percent of imports, and 85 percent of all military and commercial goods. In 1932, Hermann Schmitz Faben's joint chairman joined forces with Kurt von Schroder, director of a wealthy private bank. Schroder was a fanatical Nazi, often times dressed in his black SS uniform. Schroder is the man that is closely linked with Chase Bank, Standard Oil and William Teagle, and ITT. In 1932, Schroder and Wilhelm Keppler formed the group known as "The Fraternity." This group guaranteed a source of money to the Gestapo. Members agreed to contribute an average of one million marks a year to Himmler's personally marked "S" account and the transferable secret "R" account of the Gestapo.27

In April of 1933, Gustav Krupp sought out a private meeting with Hitler. Krupp agreed to become Hitler's chief fundraiser and chairman of the Adolf Hitler Fund. In return Hitler promised to appoint Krupp as the fuehrer of Germany industry. Over the years, Krupp contributed over six million marks of his own money to the Nazis, and his correspondence shows that he truly enjoyed his job as chairman.28 Likewise, it is common knowledge that after Hitler was appointed chancellor Krupp greeted people cheerfully with the Heil Hitler salutation.

Schirer writes that in 1931, when Hitler decided to cultivate relationships between influential industrial leaders, he kept their identity a secret.

"The party still had to play both sides of the tracks. The party had to allow Strasser, Goebbels and Feder to beguile the masses with socialist talk and denigrating the industrial magnates."

Some of the meetings were so secretive that they were held in forest glades."29

Further proof of the industrialist involvement and support of the Nazis comes from the testimony of Funk at Nuremberg. The entire list implicated by Funk is far too long to reproduce here, but besides Thyssen and Krupp it included Georg von Schnitzler-I.G. Farben, August Rosterg and August Diehn of the potash industry, Cuno of the Hamburg Amerika Line, Otto Wolf, Kurt von Schroder, and many other wealthy industrialists30

On May 2, 1933, the Nazis raided and occupied all trade union headquarters. The leaders were beaten and arrested; some were placed in the concentration camps. Union funds were confiscated and the unions were dissolved. Members of the communist party and the social democrats had already been arrested. On June 20, 1934, in what has become known as the Night of Long Knifes, Hitler purged the socialists within the Nazi party, chief among them Roehm.

With the broad financial support from the leaders of the business community as well as from the military leaders and aristocrats, the Nazis were truly a top down organization, while the Nazis used the lower class as foot soldiers to gain power. They did so in a deceiving manner, and once in power, immediately set about betraying the lower classes

We have already shown one example of divisionism by the Nazis in their rise to power. But what sets fascist divisionism apart from the ordinary divisionism of any other political ideology? Certainly any politician in a democracy appeals to some sort of divisionism, as he is fully aware that he can not possibly appeal to the entire electorate. The difference lies in the fact that divisionism is always destructive in fascism and serves only as a means to gain and maintain power. Even after gaining power, Hitler went to great pains in dividing power, playing one follower against another, creating rivalries in the party in the process. In short, Hitler kept the Nazi party divided as if it was a set of small fiefdoms. One of the biggest myths about the Nazis is that they were a single unit, when in fact they were a conglomeration of various fractured parts. Eatwell states the paradox within Hitler's power structure as: "because the party was so divided that he had power and in turn the party was divided from other key centers of power such as the army." 47 In other ideologies, the divisionism is not inherently destructive. Rather, it's based on differing approaches coming together to reach an equable solution to a problem. In his rise to power, Hitler had no intention of compromising with the other parties to form a parliamentary president. His moves were calculated to destroy any chance of that.

A couple of examples from the present can further delineate the difference between the two. Certainly many of the tax proposals coming from the Republican party today could be classed as divisionism as they favor the upper income earners over the lower income groups. While the measures are divisive they can hardly be labeled as destructive divisionism. They are more a reflection of difference in opinion.

However, an example of an act that could be termed a fascist divisionism was the Republican caused shut down of the government in November 1995 after Clinton vetoed the budget bill. Clinton had previously warned Congress that unless changes were made in the budget he would veto the bill. Members of the hard right Council for National Policy and many of their Republican members openly had declared they would shut down the government. In essence, the Republicans adopted the same policy that Hitler had in his bid to dismiss parliament; they refused to negotiate honorably.

Just as Hitler had taken a position to subvert democracy, so had the Republicans, led by Gingrich. The constitution defines the passing of the budget in detail. The spending bills originate in the House after passage by both the House and the Senate. It is then sent to the President, who may either veto it or sign it. If the bill is vetoed, it is up to Congress and the President to reach a compromise bill. Otherwise, Congress must pass a bill with a two-thirds majority. The failure of Congress to pass a bill to advert a government shutdown was a dereliction of their constitutional duty. Fortunately, the outrage coming from the general public forced the Republicans back to the negotiation table. The point to be made is the only difference between the two events---the Republicans feared the wrath of the people and capitulated, Hitler had no such fear and parliament was dismissed.

The Republican shut down of the government also serves to point out a flaw in our constitution, just as there was a flaw in the German constitution. In the case of the U. S. constitution there is no other mechanism other than shutting down the government if Congress fails to pass a budget. If the fascists in America can be successful in polarizing American politics to such an extent that the public, or at least a considerable portion of it, tolerates a government shut down, then the entire budget process becomes a fracas. And after observing the behavior of the Republicans in their ill fated attempt to impeach Clinton such a possibility does not appear so remote.
Another example of divisionism that is solely destructive that is not based on racism or class warfare was the impeachment of Bill Clinton. It served no purpose other than to smear the president, the articles of impeachment fell far short of what the founding fathers had defined in the phrase "high crimes and misdemeanors." That phrase refers back to the misuse of offices in England under the king. Additionally, the investigation of Ken Starr has been plagued by civil rights abuse and possible criminal action by Starr himself. It resembles a coup headed by the multi millionaire Scaife with the aid of the religious right, more than it resembled a justified impeachment.
But perhaps, the greatest illustration of the divisionism was seeing support for the impeachment evaporate like rain on hot pavement in the Senate following the State of the Union address and a thorough defense of the charges by Clinton's legal team. The House prosecutors with the conclusion of Ken Starr questioned Monica Lewinsky further in secret. This single action by the House Republicans invoked criticism from even members of their own party in the Senate. It was conducted against the agreed upon rules, and it was unconstitutional in that the power of investigation is delegated to the Senate. Likewise, it is against the statute of the Independent Council. It served no purpose other than to further divide and disgust the country. In short, it is nothing but an attempt at a power play.

Often times, this divisionism takes the form of racism or class warfare. It is often stated that Mussolini tried to eliminate class distinctions in fascist Italy. But the reality is that he only reinforced those distinctions. Certainly the Nazis practiced racism in an outrageous manner, ending in the Holocaust. On the other hand, fascist Italy was not racist in nature until after Mussolini adopted Hitler's Jewish solution. Fascism doesn't necessary have to be racist in nature, but racism is often used to divide the citizens, as their radical platform isn't appealing to the broad masses. In addition, racism is violent in nature and the resulting chaos from the violence serves to further divide the masses. Whether or not a fascist state is racist seems to depend more upon the culture of the society in which it arises. Before fascism, Italy had a long history of generally equable racial relationships, going all the way back to the old Roman Empire. For instance, even the slaves were eventually given full rights in Rome. However, the roots of anti-Semitism goes back much further in Germany as shown in the following quote.

"This is a good month to reflect on the toxicity of words meant to kill. Nov. 9 marks the 60th anniversary of Kristallnacht, the 1938 'Night of Shattered Glass' unleashed by the Nazis to terrorize Germany's Jews. The date was chosen specially by Josef Goebbels, Hitler's propagandist, to honor the birthday of Martin Luther, the 16th century monk who was a father of the protestant Reformation and the founder of what became the Lutheran church.

Hitler greatly admired Luther: "He saw the Jew as we are only beginning to see him today." Indeed. Luther saw the Jews as 'hopeless, wicked, venomous, and devilish... our pest, torment, and misfortune.' Initially, certain that his version of Christianity would appeal to Jews, he expected large numbers of them to covert. When that failed to happen, he turned violently against them. In 1543, Luther Published "On the Jews and Their Lies," a work that would become known throughout Germany, perhaps the most widely disseminated work of anti-Semitism by a German until the rise of the Nazis 400, years later.

"What then shall we Christians do with this damned, rejected race of Jews?" Luther asked.

"First, their synagogues should be set on fire, and whatever does not burn up should be covered or spread over with dirt, so that no one may ever be able to see a cinder or stone of it...

Secondly, their homes should likewise be broken down and destroyed...

Thirdly, they should be deprived of their prayer books and Talmuds, in which such idolatry, lies, cursing, and blasphemy are taught.

Fourthly, their rabbis must be forbidden under threat of death to teach any more...

Fifthly, passports and traveling privileges should be absolutely forbidden to the Jews...

Sixthly, I advise that...all cash and treasure of silver and gold be taken from them...

Burn down their synagogues, forbid all that I enumerated earlier, force them to work, and deal harshly with them... If this does not help we must drive them out like mad dogs, so we do not become partakers of their abominable blasphemy and all their other vices. I have done my duty. Now let everyone see to his."

This is hate speech.

< Sixty years ago next Monday on the night of Luther's birthday, Nazi gangs rampaged across Germany. In every Jewish neighborhood, windows were smashed and buildings were torched. All told, 101 synagogues were destroyed, and nearly 7,500 Jewish-owned businesses were demolished. On that night, 91 Jews were murdered; 26,000 were rounded up and sent to concentration camps. It was the greatest pogrom in history. And it was nothing compared with what was to come."33

The question then remains whether the fascism in America can be considered racist or not. The past history of racism in the United States would tend to support such. As a nation, we was one of the last industrial nations to allow slavery, and it took the Civil War to end slavery. It has been less than fifty years since "separate but equal" was the rule of the land. It's only been sixty years since Japanese citizens and immigrants were interred in camps following the bombing of Pearl Harbor. The Rosewood incident happened less than a hundred years ago, and lynching of blacks was common well into the 20th century. This country has had a long, incredulous history of bigotry and even genocide. There is no question of the genocide of Native Americans in the efforts of the U. S. Army in passing out blankets infected with small pox, or the slaughter of the Plains Indian's primary source of food, the buffalo. Then there was the Trail of Tears, as well. The Irish immigrants, following the potato famine, were greeted by the Know Nothings, a party that based its support on the hate of Catholics.

All of the hard right groups are racist, although more than one tries to play their racism down or to hide it, such as the John Birch Society and some of the various militia groups. Others are openly racists, such as the Klan, the Nazis and the skinheads. The great unifier of the far right, the Identity religion, links many of the hard right groups. The Identity religion is based on anti-Semitic belief that the true followers of Jesus immigrated to Britain and northern Europe, that today's Jews are the descendents of Satan. It's the mainstay religion among the militias, the Posse Comitatus, and even among some of the Klan groups.

Besides the normal hate groups based on racism or anti-Semitism. the religious right has emerged in the 1990s as a venomous hate group basing their hate on gays and abortion. Abortion clinics increasingly are becoming targets of bombings, arson, and vandalism. Late in 1998, Matthew Shepard was murdered in Wyoming after being tie to a fence and then pistol whipped, for being gay. Below are some quotes about gays from one of the leaders of the religious right, Pat Robertson.

"This conduct [homosexuality] is anti-social, and it is a pathology. It is a sickness, and it needs to be treated. It doesn't need to be taught in the classroom as a preferred way of life..." - 700 Club, 3-7-90

"...the acceptance of homosexuality is the last step in the decline of Gentile civilization." --Pat Robertson, of the Christian Broadcasting Network, warned that hurricanes could hit Orlando, Fla., because of gay events there. Time magazine, Oct 26, 1998

"If the world accepts homosexuality as its norm and if it moves the entire world in that regard, the whole world is then going to be sitting like Sodom and Gomorrah before a Holy God. And when the wrath of God comes on this earth, we will all be guilty and we will all suffer for it." - 700 Club, 9-6-9534

Compare that last quote of Robertson's to the following quote of Hitler on syphilis.

"...they speak of this whole field as if it were a great sin, and above all express their profound indignation against every sinner caught in the act, then close their eyes in pious horror to this godless plague and pray God to let sulfur and brimstone preferably after their own death rain down on this Sodom and Gomorrah, thus once making an instructive example of this shameless humanity."39

Such evidence, as Robertson's words, abounds that they would persecute gays, it abounds in the numerous ballot measures in various states that would deny gays their civil rights. Such a measure passed in Colorado, only to be overturned by the Supreme Court. Another measure, led by Lon Mabon in Oregon failed state wide, but was reintroduced on local ballots in the following election. Mabon has also led ballot measures to limit the concept of a family and limiting abortions to only the first trimester. The first was another attempt to limit the rights of gays.
In June 1998, near Jasper, Texas a black man named James Byrd was dragged behind a pickup. Body parts were found over a two mile length of the roadway.35 It is too early for trends in hate crimes to emerge, as the FBI only began tracking hate crimes in 1991. The one trend that does seem to be emerging is the hate crimes are becoming increasingly violent as evident from the murders of Shepard and Byrd. The real danger of these two murders is they serve to desensitize us, leading to more numerous and increasing levels of violence, just as the Nazis used increasing levels of violence against the Jews.
Racism is reemerging in various forms in the 1990s in political issues and in the Republican Party. "English only" laws are being promoted with increasing frequency by various Republican candidates, including Robert Dole, and have even appeared on some ballot measures such as California Prop 187. The obvious targets are immigrants from Mexico. In effect, its nothing more than the reemergence of nativism. Other forms of nativism have appeared, such as denying immigrants access to welfare and the school system for children of immigrants. Nativism is also behind various immigration bills and the increasing efforts directed at illegals.
Perhaps the most dangerous form of racism to emerge has been the Republican efforts to 'monitor' the polls. And videotape those leaving. Cases have arisen in the 1998 election in North Carolina, Georgia, Michigan, Maryland, Kentucky, Texas and Maine. The efforts are directed primarily at districts in which have a high percentage of minorities. Such efforts serve no useful purpose and do constitute a violation of the Voting Rights Act.36 More disturbing is the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, William Rehnquist, served as the director of Republican 'ballot security' in the poor areas of Phoenix, Arizona between 1958-1962.37 He likewise wrote a pro separate but equal memo as a law clerk for Justice Robert Jackson. All of which was brought out in his confirmation hearings.
An even more subtle effort on the part of Republicans in denying votes to the minorities and the poor is centered on the debate to allow a statistical correction to the 2000 census. Such effort on the part of the Republicans goes far beyond the election of 2000. The census will be used to reapportionment of the congressional districts for the decade. Thus, by denying the correction, they in effect are perpetuating their power to 2010 by undercounting groups that historically vote for Democrats n Dec 1998, Republican House member Bob Barr and Senator Trent Lott were exposed as keynote speakers before the Council of Conservative Citizens, a racist organization. Lott was later determined to have been an honorary member and had written several articles for their paper dating back to the early 1990s. In January, Republican National Chairman, Jim Nicholson asked members to dissociate themselves from this group and directly appealed to national committee member Buddy Witherspoon from South Carolina to resign. The request was refused.38

Once before, the Republicans were asked to denounce the radical John Birch Society at their National Convention in the early 1960s. Moderate members such as the former President Jerry Ford, did so. However the measure failed.

>Another Republican that deserves mention here is Pat Buchanan and his anti-Semitic views. Buchanan has opposed virtually all civil rights bills and favorable court decisions; he has supported apartheid in South Africa; he has spewed forth views of Holocaust denial; he has called fascists such as Franco and Pinochet soldier-patriots. And Buchanan was a key figure in urging Reagan to visit the SS cemetery in Bitburg.40

Thus as we prepare to enter a new century, the Republican Party has adopted racism as a divisionist tool to divide the electorate in an attempt to maintain power and enact their extremist agenda. Not all members of the Republican Party are racist, but many of the members from the hard right that controls the party are racists. There are honorable members of the party, but they are being forced into lesser and lesser roles. The extremists have gained control. It is the burden of those honorable members to take back control of their party and denounce the extremist before it becomes too late.

Perhaps the best assessment of the use of destructive divisionism by fascist in the United States comes from a 1945 War department publication:

"Three Ways to Spot U.S. Fascists.

Fascists in America may differ slightly from fascists in other countries, but there are a number of attitudes and practices that they have in common. Following are three. Every person who has one of them is not necessarily a fascist. But he is in a mental state that lends itself to the acceptance of fascist aims.

1.Pitting religion, racial, and economic groups against one another in order to break down the national unity is a device of the divide and conquer technique used by Hitler to gain power in Germany and in other countries. With slight variations, to suit local conditions, fascists everywhere have used this Hitler method. In many countries, anti-Semitism is a dominant devise of fascism. In the United States native fascists have often been anti-Catholic, anti-Jew, anti-Negro, anti-Labor and anti-foreign born. In South America native fascists use the same scapegoats except that they substitute anti-Protestantism for anti-Catholicism.

Interwoven with the master race theory of fascism is a well planned hate campaign against minority races, religions, and other groups. To suit their particular needs and aims, fascists will use any one or a combination of such groups as a convenient scapegoat.

2. Fascism cannot tolerate such religious and ethical concepts as the brotherhood of man. Fascists deny the need for international cooperation. These ideas contradict the fascist theory of the master race. The color, race, creed or nationality-have rights. International cooperation, as expressed in the Dumbarton Oaks proposals, run counter to the fascist program of war and world domination. Right now our native fascists are spreading anti-British, anti-Soviet, anti-French and anti-United nations propaganda.
3. It is accurate to call a member of a communist party a communist. For short, he is often called a Red. Indiscriminate pinning of the label Red on people and proposals which one opposes is a common political device. It is a favorite trick of native as well as foreign fascists.
Many fascists make the spurious claim that the world has but two choices---either fascism or communism and they label as communist everyone who refuses to support them. By attacking our free enterprise, capitalist democracy and by deny the effectiveness of our way of life they hope to trap many people."74

The extreme anti-communism and anti-socialism stance of the fascist is beyond dispute among honest historians. Both communists and socialists were the first to enter the concentration camps in Nazi Germany. Both Mussolini and Franco fought against communist influence. From the brief survey of the fascist philosophers and extreme anti-liberal stance has been a factor in fascism from the beginning. The Nazi used socialism as a ruse to gain power, but once in power they purged the socialists within their party. The following quotes taken from Mein Kampf will illuminate the anti-communism, anti-parliamentary democracy, and the social darwinism of Hitler.
"Just as in 1918 we paid with our blood for the fact that in 1914 and 1915 we did not proceed to trample the head of Marxist serpent once and for all, we would have to pay most catastrophically if in the spring of 1923 we did not avail ourselves of the opportunity to halt the activity of the Marist traitors and murders of the nation for good"41 >
"As regards the possibility of putting these ideas into practice, I beg you not to forget that the parliamentary principle of democratic majority rule has by no means always dominated mankind, but to the contrary is to be found only in brief periods of history, which are always epochs of decay of peoples and states."42
"The best state constitution and state form is that which, with the most unquestioned certainty, raises the best minds in the national community to leading position and leading influence.
But as in economic life, the able men cannot be appointed from above, but must struggle through for themselves,..."43
The second quote certainly is anti-liberal as it shows Hitler's contempt for the democratic process. The last quote reveals Hitler as a social Darwinist of which Turner makes the point in several places in his book.44 Social Darwinism runs counter to the aims of socialism. In fact it is the antithesis. It allows the elite to gain further power, it willingly discards the poor and the weak as expendables. With the anti-communism stance and social Darwinism character of Hitler, it is not surprising that the fascist in America would come from the extreme right. The United States was right in opposing communism. But to what links? As with anything else moderation is an admirable quality, excesses of any nature are damaging. Truman or Eisenhower were not fascists for their anti-communism actions. However, Tail Gunner Joe was either a fascist or a willing dupe of fascists. The type of anti-communism of McCarthy served no other purpose than to further his political career. He openly violated the right to free speech and assembly of his victims. His aim was to destroy them with out any regard to the evidence.

The social Darwinism as initiated by Reagan and his attacks on the poor, and the dismantling of the welfare program led by Newt Gingrich will also be labeled as examples of creeping fascism. Throwing people into the streets arbitrarily to fend for themselves is destructive; it is social Darwinism at its worst. Forcing them to except wages below the minimum wage law is denying them their equal rights. But it was precisely the economic woes of Germany that allowed the Nazis to rise to power. Currently America is enjoying good economic times, but when the economy takes a turn to the south the full impact of the lack of a social safety net is going to be felt hard.

The next trait of fascism, extreme exploitation, is a direct result of one of the primary traits of fascism, extreme nationalism. The form of nationalism promoted by fascism not only concerns the standing in the world but also applies to the sacrifices that are expected of citizens. In short, the fascist state reigns supreme while the individuals are subordinate to the state. The subordination of individuals to the state is the antithesis of liberalism. Once again some quotes from Mein Kampf will suffice.

"Since for us the state as such is the only form, but the essential is its content, the nation, the people, it is clear that everything else must be subordinated to its sovereign interests."45

"a peace, supported not by the palm branches of tearful, pacifist female mourners, but based on the victorious sword of a master people, putting the world into the service of a higher culture."46

Certainly from those two quotes there can be no question of the subordination of individuals as practiced under the Nazis or to any limits short of world domination by the Nazis. It is often stated that Hitler left a road map to his future goals in Mein Kampf. There is no greater evidence of that than in the last quote. How then did he rise to power? The problem was nobody was listening. Nobody challenged his aggressive views toward war, or at best they believed that they could control or contain him. Only later did they find out the errors of that false assumption.

This writer can find only two instances of this extreme exploitation in America. Thanks to the efforts of CBS 60 Minutes and Evening News, the story broke about the Tomb of the Unknown and how the Reagan White House pressured the military to find an unknown to bury on Memorial Day 1984. Turns out that in their haste to respond to the pressure coming from the White House, they deliberately buried a fallen soldier that wasn't so unknown. The unknown was Michael Bassie. This man had given everything to his country except for his name. And the lowlife filth occupying the White House had that stripped from him so he could have a photo op on Memorial Day in an election year. This writer can think of no other action that is more despicable; it's unforgivable.

Of course Reagan made sure he was the star of this photo op and used it to promote and build support for his extremist military agenda.
The second instance comes at the hands of Newt Gingrich and the Republicans of the 104th and 105th Congress. They have stripped the rights of welfare recipients and required that they participate in workfare. The problem comes in that these poor souls are not even entitled to be paid the minimum wage or the right to unionize in some cases. In other words, the Republican's answer to the poor is to force the to work in perpetual slavery with no chance of ever breaking out of poverty.
But this event is much more dangerous and goes much further than it appears. The danger here lies in the suspension of the constitutional equality under the eyes of the law. The Republicans have in effect created a sub-class in which one of the very fundamental tenets of our constitution, equality under the eyes of the law was ignored and thrown out the window. Nor is this the only example of unequal treatment of the poor at the hands of the Republicans. They also have advocated cut backs in the budget for the public defender's office.
The Republicans have been very successful in their propaganda in demonizing the poor. There seems to be an almost gutter level hatred of the poor and any aid to assist them. Instead of reaching out a compassionate helping hand towards the poor, the Republicans have adopted a mean spirited social Darwinist view.
This brings us to the trait of opportunistic ideology of fascism. It is perhaps one of the more confusing aspects of fascism. Mussolini appears to have been indeed a socialist before founding the fascist party. Mussolini likewise went from a pacifist to a rabid warmonger. Clearly such dramatic changes in ideology could only be based in an opportunistic grab for power. Mussolini started supporting a syndicalism economy, but by 1923, with clear objections from business leaders, he concluded the Palazzo Chigi Pact. This pact's main intent was to simplify business relations by making the fascist the sole representative of labor. In 1925, the Plazzo Vidoni agreement was signed. This agreement made Rossoni's union the sole representative of labor. It likewise prohibited the challenging of factory management. By the close of the year, the grateful employer's federation publicly announced adherence to the fascist regime.48 Such transformations illistrate the opportunistic ideology present in fascism or is it a lack of ideology, as well as further dispeling the myth that fascism is another form of socialism.

Part of the problem with the ever-changing ideology of fascism arises from the divisionism. Strasser was a socialist and it seems that Goebbels was a Marxist. Both were allowed almost free reign in promoting their own economic views as long as it gathered more support of serve Hitler's purpose. But once their views failed to serve Hitler, they were then brow beaten severely. An example of such reversal in party ideology of the Nazis occurred on February 14,1926. Prior to this date, both Strasser and Goebbels had approved of a plebiscite campaign to deprive former royalty of their possessions, a measure, that was popular with the common citizens. On the given date, Hitler summoned both men to a meeting in Bamberg. Before those gathered, Hitler forced both to capitulate and abandon the program.49 Similar events have already been given, in which various Nazis were initially allowed to promote socialism in efforts to appease the lower classes in an effort to gain their support.
Examples abound throughout the history of the Nazis where they adopted their ideology to suit the audience. In October 1932, Strasser announced a new program that was a stark reversal of the program the Nazis had advocated in July. Higher taxes on the rich had been replaced with a general reduction of taxes, instead of price controls it centered on freeing prices. Instead of protectionism trade policy, export and global trade was now promoted. Likewise, much of the inflammatory rhetoric had been dropped.50
Hitler seems to have sensed the explosive nature of economics and tried to avoid the subject both publicly and within the party. From all indications, he was dissatisfied with the party planks on economic matters. The only official stance on economic matters was the 1920 twenty-five point program. However, he only referred to this policy document disparagingly in Mein Kampf and distanced himself from the document.51 Likewise Hitler would never take an aggressive stance on minor issues, he played to his audience to win their support.
Perhaps the most dramatic evidence of the opportunistic character of the Nazis is illustrated by the actions of thirty-nine businessmen in November 1932. The group contained such notables as Krupp, Thyssen, Bosch, Siemens, and others. In a signed letter to Hindenburg they urged him to appoint Hitler as chancellor. In essence they were placing a bet that the socialism ideology was a fraud and that once in power he would be a tool of capitalist.52
The only other reversal in policy that could rival the bet that the leaders of big business made was Hitler's writings. In the first part of Mein Kampf he argued that France was the sworn and greater enemy of Germany. However, the second part to Mein Kampf he reversed course and argued that Russia was the enemy as opposed to the first book in which he proposed an alliance with Russia.53 This was a complete change in his foreign policy. One can only speculate as to the reasons behind such a switch.
Many writers have tried to label the Nazis as socialists in a folly to distance themselves from fascist theory. They are quick to point to the syndicalism policy as proof of socialist regulation of business. They are in error, of course. Syndicalism is neither left nor right in itself. It can be either, depending upon the political structure. Syndicalism with labor groups or consumers dominating the issues would indeed be socialistic in nature. On the other hand, syndicalism with only industry or business groups dominating is certainly from the right wing of the political spectrum. The issuing of controls or goals over the production of war material by the government in a syndicalism system is neither left nor right, it's simply self-preservation. The goals and controls, including the 4-Year Plan issued by Goring, were nothing more than gearing the economy up for war time production. In essence, they were merely self-preservation measures. >

Secondly, they will point toward many of the public works projects that were implemented under the Nazis as examples of socialism. An example of this is the construction of the autobahn, a project that had been planned by previous governments, as were many of the public work projects. They likewise forget that the Nazis took over at the bottom of an economic depression, public work projects were enacted not only in Germany, but in the U. S. as well as a means to end the depression. Many of those projects in the U. S. were the construction of useful infrastructure, such as the building of the high school in New Ulm, Minnesota. Others had a definite commercialism bent to them, such as the construction of Timberline Lodge on Mount Hood in Oregon. Labeling the construction of a facility for a commercial business as socialism is simply fools folly. The same applies to many of the public works projects that were implemented under the Nazis. Labeling such programs as socialism would be the same as labeling the construction of the interstate highway system as socialism. If the Eisenhower administration had one shinning moment, it was his support for the construction of the freeway system. For those that are silly enough to label such work as socialism, let them be reminded that no other single event, other than the construction of the cross continental railroad aided the development of business. Besides the obvious advantage to shippers, the interstate highway system has spawned many new businesses. Think of the number of motels/hotels as well as the tourist traps, service stations, and others that have grown up along the freeway system. The same applies to Germany and the autobahn.

Finally, the same writers that label fascism as socialism would like their readers to believe that these government regulations and bureaucratic offices held ultimate power. Failure to comply would result in the owners being shot. Nothing could be further from the truth. The Nazis for a large part lived in fear of the leaders of big business. They were aware that they had no comprehensive economic plan and would defer to the judgement of the business leaders.

This point can be driven home with one simple example. Goering was one of the Nazis that had little economic knowledge, but harbored some of the more radical economic ideas and was fond of using regulatory offices. Goering tried first to persuade the steel industry, both the smelters and miners, to use low-grade German ore as opposed to the high-grade Swedish ore. Importation of ore from Sweden would use up precious foreign currency, as well as being a less reliable source in the event of war. The invasions of Denmark and Norway were conducted solely to protect the Nazis shipping routes for the Swedish ore. Most of the industrialists politely refused Goering's request; even under threats of arrest for sabotage, they still declined.54 None were arrested for refusal. Instead Goering formed the Herman Goering Works to take on the task. By the time of the outbreak of the war it had evolved to be one of the largest companies in Germany.

Farben is another example of the Nazis bowing to the expertise of leading corporations. With the advent of the first 4-Year Plan, they realized they needed the cooperation of business leadership in order to achieve self-sufficiency in a series of raw materials and finished products. Most of which were items would be crucial to wartime production. By the end of the war Farben, had a series of factories around concentration camps, were major users of slave labor, along with Krupp and many other corporations.

But the most damning evidence of the Nazi's unbridled corporatism was evident shortly after passage of the Enabling Act, when Hjalmar Schacht was appointed president of the Reichsbank. Schacht was a brilliant financier who helped negotiate the Dawes Plan and was largely responsible for stabilizing the currency in 1923; he also detested democracy and parliamentarianism. His first official act was the creation of Metall-Forschungsgesellschaft A.G. (Mefo), a dummy corporation of four armament firms. The state assumed the liability for their debts. The Mefo bills were not unlike promissory notes, they were issued to government contractors and could be extended to five years.55 Such favoritism of business is certainly not socialism. Today in America such corporate aid is labeled as corporate welfare. Note the similarity here not only to the present corporate welfare that's being doled out, but also to Eisenhower's warning of the military-industrial complex. The American military-industrial complex didn't need to invent a new plan, they were simply free to follow the example the Nazis used. In fact fascism is inseparatable from corporatism. You simply cannot have a fascist government without corporations and a capitalistic economy.

Schacht was later appointed to minister of economics in 1934, a post he retained until he resigned in 1937 over policy disputes. He was not an anti-Semitic and was conscious of the negative aspects of the takeover of Jewish business on both the economy and world opinion. By 1936, he was advocating slowing down the rearmament program, fearing the return of inflation.56 The return of inflation dispenses with the myths that the Nazis maintained strict control of corporations and the prices of goods in short order. In effect, such controls were non-existent. It should also be pointed out here that the economy at this time had taken on considerable shades of a consumer economy.

Italy used their form of syndicalism to eliminate labor unions; the Nazis followed a similar path. The workers benefited little from this unbridled corporatism. Unemployment went from an official figure of six million unemployed in 1933, to 2.7 million in 1937, and by the time of the outbreak of war there was a serious shortage of workers. But growth in wages was far less spectacular, real wages rose only sparingly. The index of wages rose from 92.5 in 1933 to 103 in 1937, an increase of a meager eleven-percent.57 Much of the increase in wages was achieved only from working longer hours. The only real increases in the plight of the workers came with more unpaid leave. Many of the other benefits produced no real benefits to the worker, such as the factory beautification program.

From looking at the philosophers of fascism, it was revealed that fascism was a reactionary movement. What then was the fascist reacting to that led to the rise of Mussolini and Hitler? Many people responding to the question would simply answer the Treaty of Versailles. But such an answer is only partially correct. It doesn't account for the widespread rise of fascism in many European countries following WWI. In fact, during the period between the two world wars, every government from the Rhine to the Pacific underwent drastic changes. In many of those fascism had ample support but in the end was rejected. Some of the problem can be laid to the beginning dissolution of the British Empire and the arbitrary way in which maps were redrawn following WWI without regard to ethnic or natural barriers. An example would be the cobbled mess of ethnic groups that formed the former republic of Yugoslavia, an area that remains a hot spot today.

Britain and the United States were about the only two governments that did not undergo a major change during the period between the wars. However, neither was immune to the rise of fascism. The U. S. saw a rise of a great many fascist groups and groups closely aligned with the fascist in the period between the wars. The German Bund, the Silver Shirts and the mother's movement were all aligned closely with fascism. It was also this period that seen the greatest membership in the Ku Klux Klan.

The United States avoided full-blown fascism by essentially adopting fascist methods on a milder scale. This was a shameful period in the history of America. The infamous Palmer raids rounded up those with communist connections. The I.W.W was harassed constantly by Hoover and the FBI. In short, only those with non-approved political beliefs would be prosecuted. This suppression of liberty had actually begun around 1900. At the turn of the century, both conservative and liberal elements combined to pass a blizzard of new laws. This effort aimed at curbing lawless quickly became dominated by conservative elements and evolved in a tool for the right wing for the remainder of the century.

As head of the FBI, Hoover quickly targeted the leaders of the left for prosecution, ignoring the criminal actions of the hard right groups. This has left the United States without any noticeable left wing compared to the rest of the industrial world.

Perhaps one of the first and most notable events was the trial of Sacco and Vanzetti, two immigrants charged with murder in Massachusetts. They were found guilty more on their political beliefs than on evidence. They were anarchists, atheists, and reportedly draft dodgers, beliefs that threatened the industrialists of the time.64 Both were executed after considerable protest. Their trial set a dangerous standard that people could be prosecuted for their political beliefs. The inclusion of this trial here is to serve as a reminder of a new problem that is emerging to confront the hard right, jury nullification. Today there is considerable debate from both sides of the political spectrum on jury nullification arising in death penalty and drug cases. It warrants close observation. If the public becomes too polarized, it could spell the end to the trial by jury system, which has served admirably for over 200 years.

Various members of the right wing are now using this as an issue in another attempt to polarize the electorate for their own selfish purposes. These members of the right wing are promoting a system of justice backed by mob or vigilante justice. Essentially, it's a system backed by violence that is not unlike the tactics used by the Posse Comitatus, the Freemen, or various militias to corrupt the justice system.

The first example of political repression came in Minnesota. The then Republican Governor Burnquist used the newly created Minnesota Commission of Public Safety to suspend New Ulm's Mayor Fritsche and City Attorney Pfaender for their pacifist views after war had been declared on Germany in 1917. The following quote details some of the shameful actions taken by the commission and its connection to the hard right.

In April 1917, soon after America declared war on Germany, the Minnesota Legislature, following ferocious debate, created the Minnesota Commission of Public Safety. This remarkable body, chaired and appointed by the governor, was given "all necessary power" to maintain order and enhance Minnesota's contribution to the war effort. Technically limited by the state and federal constitutions, the commission essentially wielded all the authority of state government during the 18 months of its active existence. >

The commission came to be dominated by representatives of the Twin Cities business community. It used its sweeping authority with gusto, not only to root out ``disloyalty'' but to combat labor unionism and agrarian activism as well.

The commission dispatched detectives throughout Minnesota to investigate people and organizations suspected of disloyalty. It regulated food prices and the liquor trade, imposing prohibition in some parts of the state. It banned union organizing and intervened on the side of management in a bitter Twin Cities streetcar strike. It created a ``Home Guard'' of some 8,000 troops to back up its decrees. The commission served as a virtual campaign committee for Republican Gov. Joseph Burnquist in his 1918 re-election bid. It turned a blind eye toward frequent mob harassment of his opponents. It interrogated and intimidated Minnesotans who declined to purchase Liberty Bonds to finance the war effort.63

Nor was such action confined to just Minnesota, many states set up similar commissions. State sponsored violence against leaders from the left was common place. One group that suffered immeasurably was the I.W.W, the Wobblies. On Nov 5, 1916, Washington State suffered its bloodiest labor battle of all time. The resulting carnage between a local sheriff and the Wobblies left seven dead and over fifty wounded in the city of Everett.65

All three of these events illustrate that the United States repressed those with radical ideas in the time period of WWI and immediately thereafter. Pacifist, labor leaders, and leftist political leaders were all prosecuted with equal zeal. Remember, this was the time period of the Rosewood incident and other atrocities. The prosecution was lead by the hard right and business leaders.

But the real answer to the question is that fascism following WWI was a reaction to the Bolshevik revolution and the rise of liberalism ideals. Up until the Russian revolution, the only economic system was capitalism. Communism was a new revolutionary system. It threatened the power elite directly and gave way to a rise not only in communism but socialism and liberalism as well. It was no accident that fascism arose first in Italy, where in the period of 1919-1922, socialists ruled in many localities. Here fascism arose in the countryside were old practices such as sharecropping were giving way to new methods. In 1920, the largest strike in Italian agriculture ever was settled when the landowners capitulated. Elsewhere, unions were wringing out concessions from the owners through strikes and boycotts.58

The real appeal of European fascism was the protection it afforded against working class movements, socialism, and communism.59 Hobsbawm states it even more forcefully in claiming that without the October revolution and Leninism there would have been no need for fascism. For up until that time, the demagogic right, although politically active and noisy in many countries, had been kept in check.60 The entire Nazi movement was a reactionary movement. The reaction to the Treaty of Versailles is well known and needs no further comment, as is the opposition of fascism to liberalism, socialism and communism. Rather, the following quote will show how complete the reaction was to the events of the time.

"Today Christians... stand at the head of Germany... I pledge that I never will tie myself to parties who want to destroy Christianity...We want to fill our culture again with the Christian spirit... We want to burn out all the recent immoral developments in literature, in the theater, and in the press- in short, we want to burn out the poison of immorality which has entered into our whole life and culture as a result of liberal excess during the past...few years."61 <

The quote above was taken from a speech delivered by Hitler. It provides the illustration that the Nazi movement was completely a reactionary movement, reacting not only to global power politics and the rise of the left, but also to the changes in arts and culture of the time. It also provides the link to demonstrate that today's hard right movement in the U. S. is equally reactionary, in particular, the element of the so-called religious right. Contrast it with the quote by Pat Robertson below.

"The Constitution of the United States, for instance, is a marvelous document for self-governmentby Christian people. But the minute you turn the document into the hands of non-Christian and atheistic people they can use it to destroy the very foundation of our society."-Pat Robertson (The 700 Club, Dec. 30, 1981)62

Apparently, Robertson is under the impression that the constitution applies to only those he chooses and is null and void for the rest of us. Hitler held a similar contempt for democracy. However, the point that the Nazis were reactionary has been established beyond any doubt. The reaction was not just confined to the global political scene or economic conditions, but extended into the very roots of the culture. Starting around 1980, fascism reared its ugly head globally. Unlike the rise of fascism in the 1920s, this time the Reagan administration embraced it. The administration openly promoted class warfare, allowed the LaRocuhians access to security and intelligence agencies, filled the EPA with Coor's lackeys, and openly supported none but the elite. In essence, the Reagan administration was the American equivalent of the passage of the Enabling Act.

There is no need to expand on the violent behavior of the Nazis or fascists, as there is no dispute of their long history of violence. Instead, the violence of various groups in the United States will be explored. Many readers will immediately think of the violence that arose in the 60s during the war protests. In fact, that is the great illusion of the media. The truth is that little violence was directly attributed to war protestors. In fact much of the violence that did come out of the war protests was the work of the FBI.

The real story of violence in the 60s was the violence inflicted upon the civil rights workers by the Klan. The early part of the 60s was marred by violence, inspired by the Klan and racial hatred of right wing groups. Eisenhower had to use National Guards to integrate the Little Rock school system. Kennedy had to use federal marshals to integrate Old Miss. When the Supreme Court order that busing was to be used as a tool for integration, the violence spread nationally. The Klan burnt school busses in Michigan to prevent integration.

Since 1980, right wing groups such as the Order, which murdered the Denver talk show host, Berg, likewise have dominated the violence. The leader of the Order was killed in a shoot out with law enforcement. Another right wing group, the Posse Comitatus became a household word only after the Kahl shoot out with law enforcement in North Dakota. And of course there was the bombing of the Oklahoma federal building by the right winger McVeigh. Perhaps the greatest widespread use of violence since the Klan has been the bombing and violence directed against abortion clinics by members of the religious right.

Violence has been the hallmark of the hard right in America dating back at least as far as the Know Nothing Party in the 1800s and their hatred of Catholics. It was business leaders that hired Pinkertons to murder union organizers in earlier times. Yet there is relatively little in the way to support that left wing groups were equally violent. Groups like the Weathermen were violent, but the group was never more than a small fringe group. Its extremely small size limited the extent of its violence. One of the reasons for the lack of widespread violence from leftist groups has already been mentioned, the suppression of left wing groups by the FBI.

The last two traits of fascism will be explored together, as they are related by an underlying use of symbols and the inseparable nature of cults and religions. There is no doubt that both Hitler and Mussolini were in effect leaders of a cult. Their extremist views would rule out a major following otherwise. In fact, both promoted imagines consistent with cults. Both chose to use propaganda to promote larger than life imagines of themselves. Both Hitler and Mussolini were Catholics; neither appeared to be particularly active members of the church. Hitler referred to Christianity throughout Mein Kampf, as already shown by quotes of which a few more will be included here.

"The sword will become our plow, and from the tears of war the daily bread of future generations will grow."

"The more the linguistic Babel corroded and disorganized parliament, the closer drew the inevitable hour of the disintegration of this Babylonian Empire and with it the hour of freedom for my German-Austria people."

< " the Lord's grace smiled on his ungrateful children." >

Officially, the Nazis were a Christian group, if one can assign a religion to the group by the public policies they enacted. In this case, the assignment is based on the following prayer that the Nazis required to be recited in all public schools.

"Almighty God, dear heavenly Father. In Thy name let us now, in pious spirit, begin our instruction. Enlighten us, teach us all truth, strengthen us in all that is good, lead us not into temptation, deliver us from all evil in order that, as good human beings, we may faithfully perform our duties and thereby, in time and eternity, be made truly happy. Amen."67

It is also true that the Nazis dabbled in mysticism as well. Certainly some of the philosophers were pantheistic. But what really underlies both the religious and mysticism aspects of the Nazis is the symbolism buried underneath. In fact, one follower of fascism believed that the masses were unable to understand anything other than mere slogans. From Mein Kampf the following quote concerns the symbolism hidden behind the Nazi flag.

" Not only that the unique colors, which all of us so passionately love and which once won so much honor for the German people, attest our veneration for the past; they were also the best embodiment of the movement's will. As National Socialists, we see our program in our flag. In red we see the social idea of the movement, in white the nationalistic idea, in the swastika the mission of the struggle for victory of the Aryan man, and by the same token, the victory of the idea of creative work, which as such always has been and always will be anti-Semitic."66

Germany. The choice of red was based on stealing from the communists and was chosen deliberately to enflame the Marxists. Throughout Mein Kampf, Hitler refers to the value of propaganda and made extensive use of symbols to convene a subtle message of hatred.
The similarities to the right wing in America is seen. The Republicans have introduced a flag desecration amendment to protect their symbolism. Even more revealing was the letter Newt Gingrich distributed to members of GOPAC. In this letter, members were to use the following words to impart a negative image: decay, failure, sick, liberal, unionized, welfare, corrupt, greed and intolerant. The following words were to impart a positive imagine: share, legacy, control, truth, and courage.68
Cults are inherently fascist in nature. The leader demands total submersion into the cult. America today has seen far too many examples of cults and cult behavior. A recent example, would be the Waco incident that ended badly. However, there are several right wing groups that do exhibit cult behavior besides the religious groups; the LaRouchians, many of the militias, and the Order would all qualify as cults. In addition, much of the hard right inside the Republican Party has taken on a cult like behavior in their idolizing Reagan. The 105th Congress renamed the Washington airport after him. In the present Congress Congressman Matt Salmmon of Arizona has introduced a bill to deface Mt Rushmore by adding Reagan's imagine to the monument.69
It has been shown beyond any reasonable doubt that Hitler and the Nazis were right wing extremists best described as social darwinists, the antithesis of socialism. It was showed that the Nazis were best described by syndicalism model and that syndicalism is neither socialistic nor capitalistic, inherently. Syndicalism can be either depending upon the makeup; the Nazis were definitely capitalists in that there was no input from labor. All input was reserved for the industrialist. Further, it was shown that the industrialists openly defied Nazi desires in the case of the use of low-grade ores. It was also shown that many of the businesses that was government owned were taken over by the government prior to the Nazis, some dating all the way from the monarchy. Likewise, it was shown that many of the Nazi programs would be classified as corporate welfare today. And it was shown that the real power behind the Nazi movement was the top elitist. This should be sufficient for anyone to dispel the myth that the Nazis were socialist, when in fact they were capitalistic extremists.
In defining fascism, three traits stand above all others, totalitarian, nationalism, and extreme corporatism. In fact, one can not have fascism without corporatism. Other traits of fascism, such as destructive divisionism and the use of violence are secondary. As fascist ideology evolved in the later half of the 20th Century, a happy face was put on fascism by its leaders as they down played the violence and racism. This can be seen best in the far right wing extremist groups currently active in the United States.
Additionally, there is one fact that absolutely places the Nazis and fascism in the extreme right wing portion of the political spectrum, and not the left. No one disputes that a communist revolution attacks the ruling elite of a country. Similarly, socialism and liberalism also attacks the same ruling elite, but the right wing extremists try to claim the opposite. In reality these systems merely seek methods to ease the burden and allow the lower classes to prosper rather than attacking the elite. The Nazis, on the other hand, did not attack the ruling elite of Germany. The rich industrialists were allowed to continue their ways, eased by laws that the Nazis enacted for their benefit. Likewise, the nobility of Germany was supported by the Nazis. In short, the Nazis adopted the ruling elite in Germany and supported them, the exact opposite of what a left leaning political ideology would support.

There is no better proof of the Nazi support for the ruling elite than looking at who supported Hitler in the 1930s in America. Granted, many lower class people were involved in the pro-Hitler movement just as in Germany. But like Germany, it was the rich industrialists that funded these groups. Hearst ordered his newspapers to print pro-Nazi articles. In fact, he had them print the Nazi propaganda directly from Gobbels. Irenee du Pont funded several pro-fascist groups. Henry Ford was well known for his praise of Hitler and funded many pro-Nazis in the 30s. Andrew Mellon and John D. Rockefeller were supporters of Hitler as well. No one is foolish enough to argue that these men were not part of the ruling elite or rich industrialists in America at the time. In fact, support for Hitler among the rich industrialists was rampant.

The continued propagation of such nonsense by the present right wing is nothing short of propaganda. It fits closely with the Nazis' use of propaganda and the symbolism proposed by Gingrich and his negative words. nor will it change the history of the right wing support of the Nazis.

I've tried it and it works. Full compatibility and lossless quality.

It's a free download for the encoder, the player & the plug-ins (I use Winamp and believe there may be plug-ins for other players).

Try it, you may be surprised.

We at Radio St. Helena are also VERY SAD to have to announce the cancellation of RSD 2010. The problems with the tower holding the 3-element Yagi antenna are such that we simply had no choice. There is no chance to fix the tower in the next six weeks, but RSH is quite confident that we will be able to broadcast a RSD 2011 program next year. At the moment, I am investigating the possibility of setting up a wire antenna as a temporary measure, but I am not at all sure whether we will be able to do that. The technical resources on the VERY REMOTE island of St. Helena are not so good. If anything needs to be ordered from England, then it takes a lot of time and effort.

(Robert Kipp via Yimber Gaviria via playdx2003 ml via Roberto Scaglione, Sept 11, shortwave yg via DXLD)
==========

So, still a REMOTE possibility that Robert will be able to set up at least a wire antenna.

Stay tuned...

Radio stations are required to have profanity delays. Some networks haven't compensate so the ids and news are late. Some stations dump the delay when on the network. Live TV shows start 10 seconds early.

3666. Sony ICF-2010 with a 5 volt USB adaptor

I have a Sony ICF-2010, late 1980's vintage. I have with it a 120 volt in 4.5 volt Sony adaptor which has not been used in about 14 years.

Since the electrical system here is 230 volts, I either need to replace the adaptor or use a transformer.

5 volt adaptors to charge things that require a USB port are common here, and they have the advantage of being autoswitching multi voltage, so if I were to take the radio overseas, it would work with at most a plug change.

Has anyone run the radio with a 5 volt adaptor? Does it have a problem with the 1/2 volt overage?

Thanks in advance,

Geoff.

RHF, before you get out your ruler to measure how long his nose is, you might want to read a very current book, "America For Sale" by Dr. J.R. Corsi, in which he describes the people who want and will benefit from the failure of the United States (and not necessarily al Quaeda and the Taliban).

I think you will find Mr. Briskette is (sadly), pretty close to the mark.

If you are really worried, perhaps better safe than sorry(?), drop a silicon diode in the line, in series with the supply, will drop the

It's not home use that's the issue here, it's mobile use. And even those with the _ability_ to stream over mobile still have the issue of cost and coverage. Few people with the 200MB $15/month AT&T data plan for a smart phone are going to use their data for streaming, much to the disappointment of Pandora. Even fewer of Verizon's $10/25MB customers are going to be streaming. The growth in data plans is going to be the lower use customers that balked at paying $30 for unlimited data.

The fact that massive streaming is not going to happen any time soon is good for the wireless carriers and good for terrestrial and satellite radion, and good for iTunes.

I need to amend that. I just tried an mp3HD song on a cheap mp3 player (Sylvania SMPK 2062) and it couldn't play. Then again it only holds 2GB so putting the track on was only a test it failed.

Otherwise on most Windows players it works (most because I can't say I've used them all and I haven't tried them on my Mac yet).

Because a silicon junction voltage drop is fairly stable 0.6-0.7
VDC,in general. A small light bulb (here we go,another incandescent!)
in series is fun to experiment with as well,since the current consumption will be visible.

The crucial fact about Fox News is not that some Saudis play along with them, or that Murdoch was born in Australia, but that Murdoch and his chief lieutenant are fanatical Zionists.

By co-opting, controlling, and radically changing "conservatism," they serve the ends they truly believe in.

With every good wish,

I was about 5 minutes late to witness the first plane hitting the North tower (WTC 1). When the second plane was approaching, just before the impact, the roar was getting louder by the second. Never before have I heard a civilian passenger plane being so loud. And I grew up near air bases . According to the news reports it exceeded 500+mph. For a short time everybody standing in the crowd around me thought more plane hits will follow. Someone even said a total of 10 were possibly hijacked... last time I looked back both towers were still standing with many misfortunate souls jumping, the estimated temperature inside was 1800 degrees Fahrenheit... And who in the entire world has got balls big enough to even plan of building anything pertaining to Islam over there???

This occured during the last summer. May be the heavy energy consumption is the the reason.

Where? Owned by shareholders 3 through n, anyone from mutual funds to mom-and-pop owners, as you would expect with most any stock...

...BUT, as per the original point, Mr. bin Talal IS the second largest owner.

Who's arguing? All I see are you trolls begging Steve to come back! You all must be suffering severe withdrawal symptoms by now! You've even taken to forging his identity, such is your "adulation"!

All YOU are trying to do is prolong the trolling. Since the real Steve Kramer isn't here and hasn't been here for a very long time, all you want to do is stir up trouble for non-interested parties.

> You deserve everything they throw at you.

Interestingly, you trolls still seem obsessed with only Steve Kramer! I'd suggest to you that, in his absence, YOU and your idiot trolls mates get a life! A big ask but, you just never know!!

They should go after the FCC as well since the unleashed something for which they had no understanding or just didn't care.

Read this!

"FCC Admits Ignorance on Digital Radio, Adopts Standard Anyway"

"The Commissioners seemed completely unconcerned about the documented evidence illustrating potentially disastrous interference problems with IBOC technology. But the whopper came from the mouth of Michael Copps, who admitted with incredible candor he had no idea what the hell he was unleashing: 'A few questions remain to be settled, including how the IBOC system will function in the real world; what is the potential for and extent of interference that IBOC could cause to existing services; and the technical feasibility of nighttime AM IBOC transmissions'... Everybody involved pretty much admitted from the outset that the digital radio initiative is all about giving the broadcast industry more avenues to make money rather than actually improving radio from the perspective of the listener... You can watch and listen to the deed being done at our special report on the IBOC vote."

Bell Labs did a study that concluded some fluorescent tubes' flickering caused personality disorders, and physical health ills.

The study also concluded that the extra blue, and especially ultraviolet, contributed to, but did not cause, cataracts. But did cause eye strain and headaches.

So, AT&T standardized on warm white tubes with less flickering for office lighting, as a result. And by painting the office walls a specific shade of beige, and recessing the tubes in fixtures that limited direct exposure to the tubes, attenuated the amount of visual flickering in the ambient light, so productivity could be improved.

Incandescents were considered too expensive per lumen to use effectively, and the higher red content contributed to general irritability in some workers, while the heat generated drove up cooling costs. So, fluorescents were the choice.

Gotta love the Bell System.

The law firms' claims aren't baseless. In reality they're rooted in the false claims made by iBiquity and their unholy "Alliance". You can start with the number of stations that iBiquity touts as transmitting digital radio and the number that actually are. Then move on to the way they've intentionally wanted to force the "rollout" down the throats of broadcasters, radio manufacturers, auto companies, etc. In no way did it look like they truly wanted the market to decide. Then continue on to the false claims of hidden channels just waiting to be discovered and, unlike satellite radio, "with no monthly fees" no less.

With a little Internet research you can find all kinds of misleading statements made by iBiquity president Bob Struble. His flapping gums have iterated enough trash talk to hang him - big-time.

Just the overall attitude that "digital" is the way it should be, as the proponents loudly shout in-your-face doesn't give it license to be. But that's what they really think.

Think about it.

It's not a Mosque and the 'backers' are probably those who did the demolition on Building 7. It took three weeks to plant the charges.

In the past digital was better.

CD is better than Vinyl.
DVD is better than VHS.
The landline telephone networks improved when they went digital.

Hence people got the impression that digital is always better than analogue. Trouble is that isn't necessarily the case. Those digital systems are better because they were designed to be better than the analogue they were intended to replace. But these days, they have started using digital for reasons other than quality, especially in digital broadcasting, where they keep using low bit rates, either to reduce costs, or to cram in more services. And now you have this new HD radio system, that as far as I can work out, isn't even capable of sounding better than the analogue FM system it was intended to replace. Then they have the cheek to try and sell it as an improvement in sound quality.

Digital isn't necessarily better than analogue, but they still try to sell the idea that digital is better. I wonder how long it will take for the general public to realize this fact.

As for digital radio, unless they launch using something that is actually better than FM, then we are better off sticking with FM. What is frustrating, is that they could quite easily come up with a system that would wipe the floor with FM, but for one reason or another it just hasn't been done.

Ford is pulling the same shit in the UK with installing DAB radios as standard:

"Dragging the DAB chain"

"Kudos to Ford for including DAB radio as standard in the new C-Max minivan line - now with a seven-seat Grand version due on sale here in the UK next month. Joining Mini which announced back in February it too would be standardising Digital Audio Broadcasting, our equivalent of HD radio in the US. DAB... It's usually a ridiculously costly factory option - GB39.95 for a passable portable radio at Tesco; GBP300 more on the bill for your new Jaguar; GBP100-300 on other Fords, for example."

http://www.just-auto.com/comment/dragging-the-dab-chain_id105746.aspx

BUT:

"Car industry: “gaps in digital coverage are a major deterrent to [the] introduction of digital radios”"

"The key issue raised by SMMT concerning the necessary robustness of DAB in-car reception across the whole of the UK would require a massive investment from the radio industry to rectify:"

The conspriacy has spread to the UK.

"NDS Optimistic About Conditional Access Uses for Radio"

"I spoke with NDS recently to see what's on tap for their Radio Guard product for 2009. Radio Guard, you'll recall, is the name of the NDS conditional access capability for HD Radio. It's in the Dice iTR-100A, a digital radio reading service receiver that utilizes voice prompts and audible feedback to simplify tuning.

Todd Narwid is the NDS vice president of new media and now oversees Radio Guard. Tom Rucktenwald, formerly spokesman for the product, is no longer with the company after some responsibilities were shifted around in December.

NDS is working with chip manufacturers like Texas Instruments, Samsung, SiPort, NXP and others to work the Radio Guard intellectual property into HD Radio chipsets. The Dice unit is the first to have the NDS conditional access properties; however, "We expect eventually all HD Radio chips will have NDS Radio Guard in them," he said.

The process of making that happen, which he called "serialization and integration," is happening now.

Nahh. I don't think it spread here, it started here.

They've been promoting DAB for nearly 8 years here. At first it was advertised it as CD quality, but the advertising standards stopped that after the 1st few years. So now they make do with meaningless terms such as "Digital Quality" and "Crystal Clear sound", all designed to mislead, but they can get away with it because phrases like that don't actually mean anything.

Now they've been trying to push for digital switchover, turning of the FM signals. Hopefully that idea will blow up in their faces and some sanity will return.

I think you are years behind us when it comes to implementing silly digital radio systems. ;-o

"Just as the Left was drawn to the communist killing machines of Lenin, Stalin, Mao, Pol Pot, and Castro, so too it is now attracted to radical Islam."

"The contempt that German Hitlerytes had for "Bolshevism" or "marxist Jews" generally should also not mislead us in assessing the similarity between National Socialism and Communism. Leftist sects are very prone to rivalry, dissension, schism and hatred of one-another. One has only to think of the Bolsheviks versus the Mensheviks, Stalin versus Trotsky, China versus the Soviet Union etc. Similarity does not preclude rivalry. Hitler and Stalin were literally brothers in arms BEFORE they became rivals. That socialist brothers sometimes fall out should not prevent us from noting the brotherhood concerned."

"THE FUNDAMENTAL DOGMA of all brands of socialism and communism is that the market economy or capitalism is a system that hurts the vital interests of the immense majority of people for the sole benefit of a small minority of rugged individualists. It condemns the masses to progressing impoverishment. It brings about misery, slavery, oppression, degradation and exploitation of the working men, while it enriches a class of idle and useless parasites."

"This doctrine was not the work of Karl Marx. It had been developed long before Marx entered the scene. Its most successful propagators were not the Marxian authors, but such men as Carlyle and Ruskin, the British Fabians, the German professors and the American Institutionalists. And it is a very significant fact that the correctness of this dogma was contested only by a few economists who were very soon silenced and barred from access to the universities, the press, the leadership of political parties and, first of all, public office. Public opinion by and large accepted the condemnation of capitalism without any reservation."

"The term 'planning' is mostly used as a synonym for socialism, communism, and authoritarian and totalitarian economic management. Sometimes only the German pattern of socialism-Zwangswirtschaft-is called planning, while the term socialism proper is reserved for the Russian pattern of outright socialization and bureaucratic operation of all plants, shops, and farms. At any rate, planning in this sense means all-around planning by the government and enforcement of these plans by the police power. Planning in this sense means full government control of business. It is the antithesis of free enterprise, private initiative, private ownership of the means of production, market economy, and the price system. Planning and capitalism are utterly incompatible. Within a system of planning production is conducted according to the government's orders, not according to the plans of capitalists and entrepreneurs eager to profit by best filling the wants of the consumers.

"But the term planning is also used in a second sense. Lord Keynes, Sir William Beveridge, Professor Hansen, and many other eminent men assert that they do not want to substitute totalitarian slavery for freedom. They declare that they are planing for a free society. They recommend a third system, which, as they say, is as far from socialism as it is from capitalism, which, as a third solution of the problem of society's economic organization, stands midway between the two other systems, and while retaining the advantages of both, avoids the disadvantages inherent in each.

"These self-styled progressives are certainly mistaken when they pretend that their proposals are new and unheard of. The idea of this third solution is very old indeed, and the French have long since baptized it with a pertinent name; they call it interventionism. Hardly anybody can doubt that history will link the idea of social security, more closely than with the American New Deal and with Sir William Beveridge, with the memory of Bismarck whom our fathers did not precisely describe as a liberal. All the essential ideas of present-day interventionist progressivism were neatly expounded by the supreme brain-trusters of imperial Germany, Professors Schmoller and Wagner, who at the same time urged their Kaiser to invade and to conquer the Americas. Far be it from me to condemn any idea only on account of its not being new. But as the progressives slander all their opponents as old-fashioned, orthodox, and reactionary, it is expedient to observe that it would be more appropriate to speak of the clash of two orthodoxies; the Bismarck orthodoxy versus the Jefferson orthodoxy.

This following is taken from The World Book Encyclopedia, 1947 edition:
The chief characteristics of Fascism are as follows:

THE CULTIVATION OF IGNORANCE

Fascism, like all forms of government, rests firmly on the sincere consent of a large part of the population... To maintain this consent, the Fascist leadership must cut off the people from any information which might cause them to doubt the complete rightness of the fixed Fascist principles... All forms of communication are carefully censored, so that the public will receive only those facts that the dictators want known... Travel to other countries must be controlled, and freedom of speech and assembly must be rigorously suppressed...

Listen to 0baMa0's rhetoric and his fascistic support from the Liberals
.....sound
familiar?.....

SUPPRESSION OF LABOR AND INDUSTRY

Fascism in Italy and Germany at first won the support of the wealthy classes, both landed and industrial... These people saw in Fascism a protection against the demands of farmers and other workers... Both regimes at first upheld the rights of private property... They subjected the working classes to a rigorous discipline... As soon as they were firmly established, the dictators began to limit profit, impose capital levies, and regulate business in great detail...

.....sound
familiar?.....

THE POLICE STATE

Fascism depends upon the police to crush all opposition or dissent. Secret police spy on the whole population, and any casual remark against the regime leads to swift and severe punishment... Opposition parties are dissolved. Intellectual, athletic and recreational organizations are usually brought under the control of the Fascist authority... The ruthlessness of the police gradually becomes less noticeable... This is because within a year or so after a Fascist government takes power, vigorous opponents of the regime have either left the country, been killed or jailed...

(Both Fascist and Communist leaders make use of the police state... Every absolute government has used the police state to some degree...)

.....sound
familiar?.....

EXTREME NATIONALISM

Fascism is highly nationalistic... It tries to identify its principles with the country, so that disagreement will look like treason... Some other country, or some group within the country, is chosen to serve as the "enemy" and made to appear as the cause of all evils or misfortunes... For example, the Nazis in Germany represented their movement first as a crusade against the Jews, then as a fight against Communism and later as a struggle against the "attacks" from whatever neighboring country they wished to subdue or occupy... Extreme nationalism often becomes a kind of racial fanaticism... Sometimes it combines racial and religious bigotry...

Listen to 0baMa0's rhetoric and his fascistic support from the Liberals
.....sound familiar?.....

MILITARISM

Fascism maintains among the people a permanently warlike frame of mind... Every citizen feels that he is mobilized against enemies of the regime from within, and against possible foreign foes... The dictator usually comes to power during a period of economic crisis or depression... He relieves the depression partly by employing many people in the making of armaments... To justify this procedure, he must convince the people that the country is threatened, and must point toward some of the enemies against whom the armaments may be needed...

Listen to 0baMa0's rhetoric and his fascistic support from the Liberals
.....sound familiar?.....

Digital radio seems like a good idea, but actually it would only be a good idea if they come up with a system that is better than FM.

Perhaps the problem is that they developed digital radio before the technology was good enough. It they were starting today, and using modern techniques, then they could come up with something far superior to FM. But instead they have ended up trying to push outdated in efficient systems on us, that end up delivering poor sound quality.

PS. I'm being kind calling it "poor" sound quality :-o

Ah OK - I have always figured the required Voltage Drop needed for the Radio at normal Audio Listening Level and used a Resistor
-example- 12 VDC down-to 9 VDC -or 6 VDC.

Here you are using a Silicon Diode because it has the specific ~0.6/0.8 Volt Drop for this application.

If you are like me, there are too many junk threads here which I don't want to have to keep marking as read, much easier to just ignore them and never see them again. Here is how.

Highlight the thread you wish to ignore (pick it, left click on it, etc.) The go to the top toolbar and select message, then "Ignore Thread", poof the thread is gone, never to bother you again. Also, one you have it highlighed/selected, simply hit the "k" key on your keyboard, this will also cause it to be ignored ...

If internet become the normal way to receive radio, then the only people

HUMmmm the Cost of one Resistor or the Cost of many Diodes . . .

Somewhere 'somewhen' long ago : I was told taught to Divide my Dropping Resistor Value by Two and use Two Resistors in the DC Supply line; one in each Wire; so that the Battery would be 'isolated' and 'floating' ?

Here are some quotes from Mein Kampf:

"The fight which Fascist Italy waged against Jewry's three principal weapons, the profound reasons for which may not have been consciously understood (though I do not believe this myself) furnishes the best proof that the poison fangs of that Power which transcends all State boundaries are being drawn, even though in an indirect way.
The prohibition of Freemasonry and secret societies, the suppression of the supranational Press and the definite abolition of Marxism, together with the steadily increasing consolidation of the Fascist concept of the State--all this will enable the Italian Government, in the course of some years, to advance more and more the interests of the Italian people without paying any attention to the hissing of the Jewish world-hydra.
"The English situation is not so favorable. In that country which has 'the freest democracy' the Jew dictates his will, almost unrestrained but indirectly, through his influence on public opinion."

Many people think they arrive at their own ideas all by themselves, when in fact their ideas are usually made for them by Hollywood. Take two movies that are anti-leadership propaganda, Gladiator, and Braveheart.

In Gladiator they show a corrupt leader of Rome, but would it be corrupt if Maximus was the leader? That would be much better than having the lame senators running Rome. And of course in Braveheart the Scots should have made William their leader. If he was the leader he could have put the corrupt nobles in their place.

The purpose of the propaganda is to stop good people from wanting power. The people who have the real power now, the bankers and the media, are not threatened in the least by libertarians. But if there was a leader that was really for the people they know they would be put in their place.

In democracies money talks and those who can buy TV stations are the rulers. These rulers don't even claim to be for anything but their own profits and interests. People are much better off with a good leader who has power above the money power.

Cordoba was one of those "shining cities on a hill" that the idiot Reagan used to wax poetic about.

"The Moors built magnificent cities in Spain. Cordoba, in the tenth century was much like a modern metropolis. The streets were paved, and there were sidewalks for pedestrians. At night it was said that one could travel for ten miles by the light of lamps along a continuous strip of buildings. This was several hundred years before there was a paved street in Paris or a street lamp in London. The population of the city was over one million. There were 200,000 homes, 800 public schools, a number of colleges and universities, and many royal places surrounded by beautiful gardens.

The Tanneries of Cordoba and Morocco City were the best in the world. Cordoba was the most wonderful city of the tenth century. It was served by 4,000 public markets and 5,000 mills. Public baths numbered in the hundreds. This amenity was present at a time when cleanliness in Christian Europe was regarded as a sin."

So obviously either they use more channels or they have less bandwidth

NO! The resistor(s) will vary widely with load, the diodes would, at least not to such a significant degree ... for most intents and purposes, you can consider them a "fixed voltage drop."

The voltage drop across a diode/diodes is more or less current independend while the voltage drop across a resistor depends on the current through that resistor. High volume -> big current -> big voltage drop -> low supply voltage; low volume -> low current -> small voltage drop -> high (maybe too high) supply voltage.

A system like Sirius or XM can get 60 good sounding stereo channels in 4.5 MHz of spectrum and can cover a city with 10 KW or less. The analog FM band is 20 MHz and can also theoretically contain 60 stations, but each one needs 10 KW to cover the same area.

There were proposals for such a digital system 20+ years ago, but the NAB balked, because flamethrowers would lose their advantage. Now, the NAB's going to lose the whole enchilada, as young people stream Pandora on their smart phones.

"Non-working HD radio - Engineering says wait for new Software"

"I took my 2009 335i in for the exact same thing. Service associate called me the next day and claimed it was "fixed". When I picked my vehicle up... no change. Every station (AM/FM) would have eight subchannels - identified as HD1-HD8. HD1 would be the analog version, but no HD logo in the upper right corner. When clicking on one of the other seven subchannels, the word "acquiring" appeared in the upper right corner, but no sound. It seems the service associate knew very little about HD radio and claimed that I was picking up a HD channel with HD1 and that not having sound from the "other seven channels" was normal. This despite explaining in detail when I dropped the vehicle off about how the HD radio worked the first three weeks I owned the vehicle. Unsatisfied, I asked for the service manager and had him sit in the vehicle while I went through the iDrive screens. He admitted there was an issue, but couldn't recall any service bulletins about it or seeing any other cases like it. He promised that he would "do some research" into it and call me tomorrow. Any update on your case Robingo?"

I was wondering about this.

Could 60 channels in 4.5 Mhz of spectrum produce good sound quality?
Not sure, but thinking about it, it sounds unlikely.

Do they actually do this (providing 60 good sounding channels)?
I seriously doubt it.

They don't. Far from it. 4,5 MHz of spectrum is quite a lot by the way, but the signal strength from the satellite is not going to be strong.
For high efficiency or bits per Hertz you need a strong signal. ISTR the average for the channels is 46 kbps.

Doing-the-Math : 4,500 kHz / 60 = 270 kHz per Channel
* Presently AM/MW is 10 kHz per Channel
* Presently FM is 200 kHz per Channel

? So Why Won't 270 kHz per Channel Work for Digital Radio Broadcasting Formats ?

I think hwh has fond the answer to that one. The signal from the satellite is too weak.

Actually, for terrestrial broadcasting, with a reasonable signal level, they ought to be able to do a lot better than that. But then they still use outdated inefficient technology :-(

Take a look at the DVB-T2 specifications. That's what I call efficient.

I love it, but why single out obama? Since Kennedy (JFK), America has been without a president. Though the two parties, through different personalities and faces in the public offices, the course which a shadow government has plotted keeps forwarding itself ... that direction, as the links make point of, is not good for the vast majority of Americans
... the only question left, "Can we fix this with a peaceful revolution, or will more be necessary?"

I haven't got time to go through the technical details, but I know it VERY GOOD. As I've said many time on alt.radio.digital they should seriously consider moving from DAB to a system based upon DVB-T2 in DAB channels. Using the aac/aac+ codec obviously.

I also think they should use DRM+, as wideband multiplexes aren't suitable for every broadcaster.

Yes modern 21st century technology, vs 1980's and 1990's technology that was hampered by lack of processing power. No contest.

FLASH: Liberal Fascist George Soros purchased 29.1 million convertible notes of Sirius XM Radio Inc. (SIRI) valued at $28.1 million.

In 1979 George Soros established the Open Society Institute (OSI), which serves as the flagship of a network of Soros foundations that donate tens of millions of dollars each year to a wide array of individuals and organizations that share the founder's agendas. Those agendas can be summarized as follows:

-promoting the view that America is institutionally an oppressive nation
-promoting the election of leftist political candidates throughout the United States
-opposing virtually all post-9/11 national security measures enacted by U.S. government, particularly the Patriot Act
-depicting American military actions as unjust, unwarranted, and immoral
-promoting open borders, mass immigration, and a watering down of current immigration laws
-promoting a dramatic expansion of social welfare programs funded by ever-escalating taxes
-promoting social welfare benefits and amnesty for illegal aliens
-defending the civil rights and liberties of suspected anti-American terrorists and their abetters
-financing the recruitment and training of future activist leaders of the political Left
-advocating America's unilateral disarmament and/or a steep reduction in its military spending
-opposing the death penalty in all circumstances
-promoting socialized medicine in the United States
-promoting the tenets of radical environmentalism, whose ultimate goal, as writer Michael Berliner has explained, is "not clean air and clean water, [but] rather ... the demolition of technological/ industrial civilization"
-bringing American foreign policy under the control of the United Nations
-promoting racial and ethnic preferences in academia and the business world alike
-promoting taxpayer-funded abortion-on-demand
-advocating stricter gun-control measures

-advocating the legalization of marijuana

To view a list of many of the more important Soros donees that support the foregoing agendas, click here: http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/Articles/Organizations%20Funded%20Directly5.htm

Moreover, there are numerous "secondary" or "indirect" affiliates of the Soros network. These include organizations which do not receive direct funding from Soros and OSI, but which are funded by one or more organizations that do. These secondary affiliates also include groups that work collaboratively or synergistically with Soros-funded entities. To view a list of some of these organizations, click here: http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/Articles/Secondary%20Affiliates1.htm

All told, Soros' foundation network made an estimated $5 billion worth of grants between 1979 and 2007.

PBS broadcaster and Schumann Center for Media and Democracy President Bill Moyers is a trustee of the Open Society Institute's Board of Directors.

In 1996 Soros launched the Soros Documentary Fund with a mission to "spur awareness, action and social change." Over the ensuing decade, this Fund would help finance the production of several hundred documentaries. In 2001, the Fund's leadership was turned over to Robert Redford's Sundance Institute with a continuing mission: "to support the production of documentaries on social justice, human rights, civil liberties, and freedom of expression issues around the world."

According to journalist Rondi Adamson, most of the documentaries that that the Fund supports "are highly critical of some aspect of American life, capitalism or Western culture," and generally share Soros' worldview that "America is a troubling if not sinister influence in the world, that the War on Terror is a fraud and terrorists are misunderstood freedom fighters, and that markets are fundamentally unjust." Films which have been produced with the aid of Soros' funding include Soldiers of Conscience (2007), An American Soldier (2008), and My Baghdad Family (in production as of late 2008).

That's is correct! "NPR" will now be known as - "National Palestine Radio"

"NPR devotes 2/3 of its stories about Arab conflict with Israel to anti-Israel, pro-Palestinian voices/talking heads/partisans."
NPR has made it "official" policy not to label suicide bombers in Israel as "terrorists" because this label would be prejudicial.

The parties just don't matter ... the bankers (think federal reserve) and not elected, they serve the puppet masters at the puppet masters whim, as do our treasonous public servants--betraying the publics' trust.

Based on this piece that was in RW by Barry McLarnon iBiquity felt in the early days that the 1% power lever was perfectly aduquate because in the event the digital signal wasn't strong enough it was transition back to analog. That being said, how could anyone make the stretch that the system was reliable and of high quality. When they added HD2 and HD3 things became even more problematic. A lawyer could have a field day with that alone when compared to the false claims Struble has made over the years.

As Barry Said:

"Go back and look at all the system documentation put forward by iBiquity and the NRSC back in 2001, and you'll find no hint that a future digital power increase would be either feasible or desirable, except for the obvious increase that would occur in a transition from the hybrid system to an all-digital system.

In fact, the field trial data presented to the FCC at that time claimed very good digital coverage, out to the 45–50 dBu contours. A closer inspection of the data showed some dropouts in the mobile tests, but that was no problem, thanks to the blend-to-analog backup."

I've never heard about something like this happening with a DTV (US-ATSC) tuner/TV. Showing subchannels that weren't there much less identifying an analog source (broadcast channel or rf 3/4 output) as X-1.

I have a Sylvania STB which gets both analog and digital channels and when analog channels were on they were listed as X-0. When I plug in my VCR out it shows up as 3-0, not 3-1.

Sounds like these tuners are running bad software that needs to be updated.

I think that would be best served by lots of small community stations.
We have some of those over here in the UK, on the FM band. However DRM+ would allow more such stations to fin into the FM band, as it uses a narrower bandwidth than FM, and can work at lower signal levels.

True that at the moment terrestrial radio is a lot more convenient, but then Internet radio can be very useful at home, I often use it to listen to stations that I can receive on FM at home.

Also if mobile internet improves, as it may well do in the future, then internet radio could also become very useful in the car. If this does not happen, and if they want to use terrestrial digital radio, then I think it would be OK provided they use a good modern system. Not DAB or HD-Radio.

It probably is wise to maintain some sort of terrestrial broadcasting, for emergencies. However I think that in some ways sending broadcasts to the home via a cable makes more sense than using up large amounts of bandwidth, to send it via the airwaves.

Perhaps the internet makes more sense for TV broadcasts, as terrestrial TV isn't exactly portable either, with many people requiring a rooftop aerial.

For radio the internet can provide vastly more choice, plus better sound quality, but perhaps you a right, that it would be wise to keep at least some radio services as terestrail broadcasts.

Perhaps I should point out that I'm in the UK were we are not allowed firearms. But my only problem with taking away analogue radio, is if it is not replaced by something better. I have a problem with the plans to take away FM radio here in the UK, because the plan is to replace it with a dreadful DAB digital radio system. If they were to replace it with a good digital radio system, then I would have no problem with that.

They cram 180 radio stations plus cartoons in that 4.5 MHz. They sounded killer when they debuted 10 years ago with around 60 music channels each. Just kept getting worse.

These briefings are normally given in person by CIA Director George Tenet, and are usually attended by Vice President Cheney and National Security Adviser Rice. In the Clinton administration, up to 25 officials recieved the PDB. But in the Bush adminisration before 9/11, this was sharply reduced to only six people (see After January 20, 2001). Other top officials have to make due with an Senior Executive Intelligence Brief generally released one day later, which is similar to the PDB but often contains less information (see August 7, 2001). For some reason, people in Montana just have more common sense. Maybe it is the cold, maybe its' the water. Maybe they just don't watch mind-numbing TV, who knows ...

...they will be... in formalwear on Saturday night for the dinner.

http://thehill.com/capital-living/in-the-know/118269-big-party-week-for-the-obamas

Honorees at the dinner will include Harry Belafonte. In June 2000
Harry Belafonte was a featured speaker at a rally in Castro's Cuba, honoring the American Soviet spies Ethel and Julius Rosenberg. Tears, one observer reported, "streaked down" Belafonte's face "as he recalled the pain and humiliation his friend Paul Robeson [Stalin Peace Prize recipient] had been forced to endure" in 1950s America.

http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=837

In April 2009, a delegation of seven Congressional Black Caucus members traveled to Havana to meet with former Cuban president Fidel Castro. After the meeting, they praised Castro as a warm and hospitable host...

Will 0baMa0 wax nostalgic for fellow Communist professor and Stalin Peace Prize recipient Angela Davis?
In 1968, as Soviet tanks rolled into Czechoslovakia to crush the “Prague spring,” Davis joined the Communist Party, voicing her belief that “the only path of liberation for black people is that which leads toward complete and radical overthrow of the capitalist class."

I suspect it's somewhat higher, perhaps 5 or more on average (then there are those of us in this and some other NG's that do our part to bring up the average...) :)

always either complete fools or conservatives trying to downplay the evil the GOP is responsible for.

It is not Sweden,but rather Switherland that has very favorable gun ownership laws. This country has a long arms tradition going back all the way to William Tell ,several centuries ago. That was one of several reason why the Swiss were not overran by Germany in WWII.
Sweden,on the other hand ,has lots of restrictions-just like many other EU members. The Swiss refused to join EU, by the way.

Really? Then Sweden doesn't require all young men to go though a militia training, then to keep the rifle they have been issued. Even inspecting it from time to time to make sure it is in good condition?

Hmmm, I was under the impression this is why Hitler did not invade Sweden. He would have gotten bogged down attempting to get all those rifles, and losing valuable resources along the way. Or, is that Switzerland? Or, is it both?

Not at the moment, but as the price of microelectronics goes down, it could end up being cheap enough. OK perhaps 1 dollar might never be possible, but cheap enough.

Yes,both of them technically remained "neutral"! Operation Tannenbaum (invasion of Switzerland) was cancelled. But: both of them supplied Germany with lots of war-related things,like iron ore,chemicals, precision machinery,military spare parts etc. And laundered lots of gold. Many times more than it is aknowledged. And Sweden allowed german troops to pass through it's territory up until the middle of 1943. Sweden has a very rich and victorious military history,but the last war they fought was... in1814!

Building 7 only shook slightly,when the first hijacked plane hit the North tower. My co-workers told me later. It mysteriously"collapsed" on it's own after 5pm,same day. It was built to house Drexel Burnham Lambert in the late 80's. That was another fiasco and the seeds of the current economic disaster go back that far,sadly enough...

Only partially true. While single-party rule is inherently fascist, a dictator is not absolutely necessary. Consider Orwell's Oceania, where the Party exerts absolute control over everything, and Big Brother is an invention of the Party, which is collective by nature. Individual dictators eventually die, but the Party is collective, so it is immortal.

Russia and China both managed to survive the deaths of their founding dictators, Lenin and Mao. In Russia's case, one dictator (Lenin) was replaced by another dictator (Stalin), but after Stalin's death the Party asserted control, and every Soviet premiere after Stalin was subordinate to the Party. Same with China: upon Mao's death in 1976 there was a brief power struggle which was quickly suppressed, after which the Party followed the Soviet example to ensure that the "supreme leader" was always subordinate to the Party.

National Socialists and Soviet Socialists were almost identical. I'm not sure what Hitler and Stalin were even fighting about, except for control of territory. Two absolute dictators propped up by single-party parliaments that acted as rubber-stamps for their decrees, suppression of rights including freedom of speech, assembly, press, and religion, surveillance of all citizens and restricting their movements, forced-labor camps, genocide, and so on.

Leftards often quack that since Soviet Communists were socialists, that German Nazis must have been capitalists, but this is untrue. National Socialism was just that -- SOCIALISM. Here is a description of the Nazi economic system from Wikipedia:

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Nazism

"The Nazis argued that capitalism damages nations due to international finance, the economic dominance of big business, and Jewish influences within it. ... [Hitler] opposed free-market capitalism's profit-seeking impulses and desired an economy where community interests would be upheld. He distrusted capitalism for being unreliable, due to it having an egotistic nature, and he preferred a state-directed economy."

"In Mein Kampf, Hitler effectively supported mercantilism, in the belief that economic resources from their respective territories should be seized by force; he believed that the policy of lebensraum would provide Germany with such economically valuable territories. He believed that the only means to maintain economic security was to have direct control over resources rather than being forced to rely on world trade. ... He believed that private ownership was useful in that it encouraged creative competition and technical innovation, but insisted that it had to conform to national interests and be 'productive' rather than 'parasitical'."

"[Ernst] Röhm claimed that the Nazis' rise to power constituted a national revolution, but insisted that a socialist 'second revolution" was required for Nazi ideology to be fulfilled. Röhm's SA began attacks against individuals deemed to be associated with conservative reaction."

[Note: the "conservative reaction" refers to reaction AGAINST Nazi policies. The "conservatives" in this case are the ANTI-Nazis, since they wish to "conserve" traditional German values against the revolutionary "progressive" values of the National Socialists.]

"Joseph Goebbels adamantly stressed the socialist character of Nazism, and claimed in his diary that if he were to pick between Bolshevism and capitalism, he said 'in final analysis,' 'it would be better for us to go down with Bolshevism than live in eternal slavery under capitalism.'"

"In 1920, the Nazi Party published the National Socialist Program, an ideology that in 25 points demanded: that the State shall make it its primary duty to provide a livelihood for its citizens . . . the abolition of all incomes unearned by work . . . the ruthless confiscation of all war profits ... the nationalization of all businesses that have been formed into corporations ... profit-sharing in large enterprises ... extensive development of insurance for old-age ... land reform suitable to our national requirements."

"Joseph Goebbels adamantly stressed the socialist character of Nazism, and claimed in his diary that if he were to pick between Bolshevism and capitalism, he said "in final analysis", "it would be better for us to go down with Bolshevism than live in eternal slavery under capitalism."[103]

"The Nazi Party’s early self-description as 'socialist' caused conservative opponents, such as the Industrial Employers Association, to describe it as 'totalitarian, terrorist, conspiratorial, and socialist.'"

"In 1930, Hitler said: 'Our adopted term "Socialist" has nothing to do with Marxian Socialism. Marxism is anti-property; true Socialism is not."

Yeah that's for sure - most likely sometime in the last century for most/all of us . . . ;;-}} ~ RHF

So for a 12VDC to 9 VDC Voltage Drop at 1000 mA
[1 Amp] that would be a total of Five Silicon Diodes; with Two in one wire (+) and Three in the other wire (-).
-versus-
My present 3 x One Ohms 5 Watt WW Resistors* with Two in one wire (+) and One in the other wire (-).

*This is what I presently have to Drop the 12 VDC
Battery Voltage down to the Radio's 9 VDC Input Voltage of the Grundig Satellit 800-M Radio.

GS 800-M's DC Power Requirements :
7 to 10 VDC @ 1 Amp
-via- AC Adapter or Battery
-or- 6 x 1.5 VDC "D" Batteries*
* 9 VDC as low as 5.7 VDC

GS 800-M's Current Requirements @ 9 VDC with 1/4 Watt Audio Output Level : 510 mA (LCD Lights Off) to 850 mA (LCD Lights On)

GS 800-M's AC Adapter is Rated :
9 VDC @ 1500 mA Max.

FWIW the GS800-M's Adapter's VDC Line Input is about 10.4 VDC with the Radio "On" and normal Audio.

While using the 12 VDC Battery the VDC Line Input is about 9.9 VDC with the Radio "On" and normal Audio.

Guess I will have to go down the Grade to the RadioShack in Sonora, CA to see about some Silicon Diodes to try-out and see for myself.
http://www.radioshack.com/search/index.jsp?kwCatId=&kw=silicon%20diode&origkw=Silicon%20Di ode&sr=1
? any suggestions ?
I know that the Icom IC-R75 Receiver should be able to run directly off the 12 Volt Battery; but never got around to trying it with a larger Auto/Car Size Battery.
Power Supply : 13.8 VDC
Current Requirement : Standby 0.9 Amp and Maximum Audio 1.1 Amp

- Only partially true.

- While single-party rule is inherently fascist,

To Quote You "Only partially true"

Single-Party Rule [SPR] is Inherently Corrupt the longer it remains Single-Party Rule; Often SPR becomes more and more Centralized and Fewer and Fewer Leaders Do The Deciding For All. The Mind set of these Leaders often takes on the Form of 'The Collective' {Group Think} Frequently the Leadership becomes more and more Brutal and then Single-Party Rule becomes a Totalitarian Regime with 'The One Leader' that Controls All.

1st - The Leader* with the Party Leadership Behind Him.
* Stalin : Hitler : Mao : Ho : Castro : Pol Pot : Franco

2nd - The Party Leadership with the Party Behind Them.

3rd - The Party* with the People {Forced} Behind It.
* Communist : NAZI : Socialist : Fascist

4th - The People Exploited and Enslaved by the Single-Party Rule and Victimized by Corruption of 'The Party' and Tyranny of 'The Regime'
- a dictator is not absolutely necessary.

But eventually . . . with more and more consolidation within 'The Party'; and centralization by 'The Regime' :
"The One Leader" Arises To Lead All - Absolute !

Yes, about that. I would drop in four in the POSITIVE lead, before hooking up the radio, and measure the voltage, then add the 5th, if needed to get you the 9v.

I would NOT drop any diodes in the negative lead, you will raise the ground potential of the radios ground the equivalent the diodes voltage drop, this is simply a factor which the radio was not designed for and can affect performance--not necessarily harm the radio ...

The difference in cost between an analog-only and a digital+analog receiver could easily be $1 in volume. In the U.S. you have the licensing fees to the inventor of the codec which drives up the price, just as licensing fees to Dolby Labs drives up the price of audio equipment with their licensed technology.

Perhaps the U.S. government should purchase iBiquity and eliminate the licensing fees. It would be a less expensive deal then starting over with a new codec, and the open-source codecs currently available are not as good as what iBiquity has designed. Apparently what many people don't understand is that there is a finite limit that you can compress and decompress a signal and maintain acceptable quality. "Modern technology" does not change this limit. If you look at cell phone codecs, the sound quality has declined as they've increased compression and gone to variable bit rate codecs.

We HAD to go into Afghanistan or else the soft wood lumber embargo

There are fees for decoding of aac+, but as far as I understand it, it's 3905. Struble/iBiquity/BMW/Volvo/etc - CIVIL CONSPIRACY TO COMMIT FRAUD?

CIVIL CONSPIRACY TO COMMIT FRAUD

The FBI recently arrested Jerome O'Hara and George Perez on criminal conspiracy charges. The computer programmers had worked for Bernard Madoff and, according to the FBI, "the computer codes and random algorithms they allegedly designed served to deceive investors and regulators and concealed Madoff's crimes."

While most people are familiar with the concept of criminal conspiracy to commit fraud, many do not realize that some states, including Texas, allow injured parties to bring civil claims for similar actions.

The necessary elements of civil conspiracy under Texas law are: 1) two or more persons; 2) an objective to be accomplished; 3) a meeting of the minds on the objective or course of action; 4) one or more unlawful, overt acts; 5) damages as a proximate result. As in the case against Madoff, the objective of conspirators is often to defraud victims out of their money.

A civil conspiracy claim allows plaintiffs to bring their claim against multiple individuals and, if successful, all parties to the conspiracy are held jointly and severally liable damages. In a civil conspiracy claim, each defendant is liable not only for his or her own actions, but also for the actions of his or her co-conspirators committed in furtherance of the conspiracy. This rule increases a plaintiff's chances of recovering compensation, particularly when one or more of the defendants is insolvent.

Of course, proving a civil conspiracy claim is not without unique challenges, particularly with respect to intent. It is not enough to prove that the defendants merely agreed to act together, but rather a plaintiff must prove that the defendants agreed either to accomplish an unlawful purpose or to accomplish a lawful purpose through unlawful means.

http://www.johnmcduff.com/blog/2010/02/civil-conspiracy-to-commit-fraud.shtml

I didn't know about the "civil" version of conspiracy to commit fraud. With these automakers knowing about the fraud of "High-Definition Radio", though TSBs and HD Radio Trouble-Shooting Guides, which indicated there were no "fixes" for HD radios, then rolling the costs of HD Radio as standard onto consumers, this might just fly against these cohorts. I'm hoping that the FBI, or DOJ, will get wind of the investigation, and charge these cohorts with criminal fraud against the American Consumer. We all know that Struble is the Bernie Madoff of terrestrial radio. If I have time, I'm going to email all of the major TV networks and newspapers about the investigation - LOL!

3906. Struble's fucked - "It appears that a class action lawsuit is likely to result" LMFAO!!!

"Sirius XM's (SIRI) Competition: Law Firm Investigating HD Radio Consumer Complaints"

by Demian Russian

HD Radio's struggle to compete with Sirius XM's (NASDAQ: SIRI) Satellite Radio service doesn't seem to be getting any easier. Keefe Bartels LLC, a New Jersey-based law firm, is fielding consumer complaints and investigating HD Radio's sales and marketing claims. iBiquity Digital Corporation owns the HD Radio trademark. "Despite iBiquity's claims of improved sound quality and transmission, there have been numerous complaints about HD Radio from not only the radio industry but also consumers," states Keefe Bartels. It appears that a class action lawsuit is likely to result.

HD car radios are plagued by an inability to receive the digital signals transmitted by FM and AM radio stations and a significantly reduced sound quality when such signals are received. Such problems coupled with the increased costs for HD car radios call into question the utility of this supposed technological innovation. Consumers are being enticed to purchase HD car radios that commonly fail to perform or provide any benefits and features. The additional cost to the consumer is both unwarranted and unnecessary when the HD radios do not work as they are supposed to.

– Keefe Bartels LLC

While Keefe Bartels notes that HD radios "are advertised as a free over-the-air broadcast service which does not require a subscription fee like Satellite Radio," they also point out that there may be a liability "for statements, omissions or misrepresentations of material facts that should have been know to be false or misleading and promoted the sale of the product." Keefe Bartels states that HD Radio "claims to provide superior quality sound to FM and AM radio" and in particular cites "CD quality to FM and FM quality to AM" in its description. However, the law firm points out that HD Radio "does not stand for 'High Definition.'" They go on to state that, "according to iBiquity, the 'HD' does not stand for anything." While pointing out that HD Radio is a completely different technology than HD Television, they explain that "iBiquity likely uses the 'HD' as a marketing device based upon consumers' understanding and ever increasing desire for HD television."

According to Keefe Bartels, there has been numerous consumer and industry complaints about HD Radio's performance issues. The complaints cited include:

•Radio receiver bumping station from HD to analog mode
•Echo sound heard when the radio switches between HD and analog modes •Crackling or static sound when HD mode is inactive •Insufficient numbers of HD Radio stations •Loss of signal while driving in valleys or between high buildings •Signal disruption for environmental conditions •Adjacent channel interference

Keefe Bartels says that "automakers are aware of the complaints associated with HD Radio." The law firm cites a BMW Service Information Bulletin which described the problems revolving around the HD Radio service. The BMW bulletin stated that there is "no retrofit kit or procedure available" to fix the performance issues. The firm notes that BMW was one of the first automakers to offer HD Radio and that "lower end BMW models typically require an additional cost of approximately $350 for the installation of a HD radio."

According to Keefe Bartels, "The attorneys at Keefe Bartels are continuing their investigation into HD Radio and whether consumers are being forced to purchase technology that does not work as claimed. If you have experienced problems with your factory-installed HD radio receiver, we are interested in speaking to you." The firm goes on to say, "As news develops and the investigation proceeds, Keefe Bartels, LLC will carefully monitor events and research all relevant laws."

Keefe Bartels has these automakers and Struble by the balls - LMFAO!!! The proof is in the TSBs and Trouble-Shooting Guides, dating back to 2007, then forcing HD Radio standard, anyway. Betcha that with the non-HD Radio broadcasters involved, this IS going to escalate. This is only a drop in the bucket - LMFAO!!!!! See ya in prison, Bob, and don't overdose on your Ambien - LMFAO!!!!!!

Be careful. You can easily make a voltage doubler by accident when messing with rectifiers in series.

There is a slight matter to attend to here. The two actors may indeed have differences..many of them, however, the script they were provided with is still identical.

If, in the case of politicians, that is NOT true, then a better analogy is in order.

Not at the current draw the radio will require, for very low current, and if you start chucking in large caps you are NOT CONNECTING CORRECTLY, maybe ... don't use any caps, or only one across the diodes output and don't worry about all that ... it just adds to obfuscation.

Given robotics, automated process control, and even pattern recognition algorithms in bots sent into fields to pick fruit, we dont need grunts anymore. Even the army now relies on highly trained teams that dont want any stupid loose canons when trying to take on an objective.

If the talented people merely performed the physical labor in some useful way rather than working out in gyms, there would be no need for grunts at all. They need the exercise.

Even somewhat retarded women have the innate maternal instincts to take good care of kids. And with subsidized fertility clinic services, would be able to give birth to talented sociable children who would prove to be a joy and not a burden later on in life.

Any careful look at the robber baron era can uncover the affection the highly successful had for their non-white nannies, who were very well taken care of for the rest of their lives.

With in vitro, non-white women could even birth trophy blonde girls, who will no doubt love their birth mothers- even more than adopted do. And given the demand by the rich men of this world, of all races, have for trophy wives, the mothers could assure a comfortable future.

Not that nutrition and eduction are not necessary, but still, that is not sufficient. There is a rapidly increasing number of DNA markers...

This is related to higher levels of testosterone & adrenalin along with lower levels of dopamine and seratonin, which at puberty cause problems.

Trophy Wives..the growth industry of 2015? It has possibilities. Sell the main chassis and then the accessories. Repair shops can also be set up. Insurance companies could also benefit from policy sales. These 'Trophies' will invariably run into each other.

Think Automotive industry on a really, really Human scale. "Hey, Fred..ya seen my 2017 Aleisha?..purrs like a Kitten!"

My neck of Ozark woods is 99.9% white. Look up the counties and hill towns north of I-40 between I-540 and US 65. Towns like Alpina, Bee Branch, Clinton, Deer, Flippin, Eureka Springs, Greer's Ferry, Heber Springs,.. and so on thru the alphabet.

Then look at the school reports at http://normessasweb.uark.edu/schoolperformance/School/School.php REPEATEDLY, you see ZERO rates of violence. Drop out rates in the single digits, graduation rates near or over 90%, 95% attendance.

This is still white family farm country. They still spank here, and do it in school too. You are given a form to fill out if you dont want the paddle used on your boy, but no bully would let a parent wimp him out like that. People here dont use drugs to adjust a kids attitude, but still use the woodshed. Still works.

Unemployment still at or below 7%.
If you want a white country, there is one to move to. Put up or shut up.

Dwight David Eisenhower was from Texas, he was born in Denison,Texas in 1890.
I doubt if America will ever have a President again as Great as he was, not in my lifetime anyway.America does NOT have a President now, nor a VP either.

"BOTH Republicans AND Democrats are hypocrites and cowards, because both have sold out America and the American gross domestic product (GDP) to Israel. The United States does not exist anymore as a sovereign entity and all our energy, all our societal efforts are dedicated to supporting Israel first, Israel second, and Israel third.

America is a Jew-ocracy that is run for the Jews, by the Jews, and of the Jews, because America is a Jewish owned corporation, not a "democracy." Votes don't matter much here in the USA because Washington runs on money, not on votes, and Democratic presidential candidate Senator Hillary Clinton is just as sold out to the Israeli lobby, AIPAC (the America Israel Public Affairs Committee), as Republican presidential candidate Senator Bill Frist. Former president Bill Clinton was sold out, Jimmy Carter was sold out and later admitted it after he left office, Ronald Reagan was sold out, all American presidents were sold out going back to JFK..

All our Middle East problems, our vast national debt, our collapsing economy, and our collapsing standard of living are all directly the result of our blind support for Israel's illegal ethnic cleansing of Palestinians from Palestine. Bush used Israeli torture techniques on Moslems, our leaders have let Israeli agents here in the USA illegally spy on American citizens, we ignore UN Resolutions that tell Israel to go retreat to their 1967 borders as international law mandates. We routinely block the United Nations from taking action against Israel's illegal activities. We gave Israel plutonium and helped them build their atomic and hydrogen bombs, we shoveled Israel over 140 billion in foreign aid since 1950, and we have wasted 3 to 4 trillion dollars in total on the cult of Zionism since 1950 through the cost of illegal wars, oil embargoes, foreign aid, and the cost of the strategic oil reserve. Frankly, the Jews are bleeding America dry and no one is courageous enough to stand up to the Jews because Jews in America are the exact equivalent of George Orwell's BIG BROTHER. Jews tell us all what to do, what we are allowed to think, and what we are allowed to speak. Jews control our government, dominate our media, and crush any opposition by slandering those with legitimate and provable complaints as "anti-Semites."

It must be great to be above criticism and to control the stupid and dull Christian masses and laugh at them behind their backs and even to their faces and get no response other than more feet licking, bowing, and kow towing. George Bush is a useful idiot, a water carrier for the Jews just as Hillary Clinton will be if elected president. Both

Iraq wars were started for the Jews and by the Jews. All our politicians are a disgrace and we will never regain our sovereignty, solve our foreign policy problems, or balance our budget until we end our slavish allegiance to the immoral, racist, murdering, torturing, lying, stealing, manipulating cult nation of Israel.

The Holocaust business feeds the Zionist cult and Hollywood has deified Jews while vilifying Moslems...

Our nation is a lying, hypocritical mess and the world hates us because the world knows we are a nation of morons run by Jews. Where are the brave and honest Americans who speak with one face, not two? Americans are defeated, weak, foolish, and can't even speak out because they are scared like little girls, unable to even speak the word "Jew" unless in praise or on bended knees. Imagine if Catholics or Moonies or the Mafia had that much control in America! Jews are not above the law and Jews can be opposed for their real world crimes just like anyone else. Our brains are frozen by decades of media programming and propaganda so that now we cannot even speak the "J word." Political correctness, which was invented by Jews as a form of mind control, prevents Americans from being fully human. We are a nation of slaves, licking Jewish feet day after day and we never get tired of it. It's a sad and pathetic situation and we are a sad and pathetic people who deserve the contempt of the world because we have no backbone and no honesty.

The United Kingdom is little better than the USA because Tony Blair is a rabid Christian Zionist himself and most of his top advisors are Jews. Much of Europe is sold out and controlled by Jews and the cult of Zionism has Western leaders by the testicles, frozen and unable to fight back. Now is the time to speak up, to fight back, and to do it legally, responsibly, and effectively. Just decide that from now on Jews have no special privileges in your brain and that you can criticize Jews just like Republicans, Democrats, Catholics, Moonies, or any other group. Jews act as a 90% unified group, commit crimes as a 90% unified group, and control America as a 90% unified group, and thus deserve to be criticized as a 90% unified group. Being able to criticize those who do harm is what democracy means and is exactly what freedom of thought means. Become a fully functioning human being and not just another mind controlled blob of useless DNA!"

Here are some quote from Mein Kampf:

"Human progress and human cultures are not founded by the multitude. They are exclusively the work of personal genius and personal efficiency."

"Does anybody honestly believe that human progress originates in the composite brain of the majority and not in the brain of the individual personality?"

"The devastating influence of the parliamentary institution might not easily be recognized by those who read the Jewish Press, unless the reader has learned how to think independently and examine the facts for himself. This institution is primarily responsible for the crowded inrush of mediocre people into the field of politics. Confronted with such a phenomenon, a man who is endowed with real qualities of leadership will be tempted to refrain from taking part in political life; because under these circumstances the situation does not call for a man who has a capacity for constructive statesmanship but rather for a man who is capable of bargaining for the favour of the majority. Thus the situation will appeal to small minds and will attract them accordingly."

"One truth which must always be borne in mind is that the majority can never replace the man. The majority represents not only ignorance but also cowardice. And just as a hundred blockheads do not equal one man of wisdom, so a hundred poltroons are incapable of any political line of action that requires moral strength and fortitude."

"It is not the aim of our modern democratic parliamentary system to bring together an assembly of intelligent and well-informed deputies. Not at all. The aim rather is to bring together a group of nonentities who are dependant on others for their views and who can be all the more easily led, the narrower the mental outlook of each individual is. That is the only way in which a party policy, according the the evil meaning it has to-day, can be put into effect. And by this method alone is it possible for the wirepuller, who exercises the real control, to remain in the dark, so that personally he can never be brought to account for his actions."

"Such people would raise an outcry, if, for instance, anyone should attempt to set up a dictatorship, even though the man responsible for it were Frederick the Great and even though the politicians for the time being, who constituted the parlimentary majority, were small and incompetent men or maybe even on a lower grade of inferiority; because to such sticklers for abstract principles the law of democracy is more sacred than the welfare of the nation."

"the best form of government is that which makes it quite natural for the best brains to reach a position of dominant importance and influence in the community."

Many people think they arrive at their own ideas all by themselves, when in fact their ideas are usually made for them by Hollywood. Take two movies that are anti-leadership propaganda, Gladiator, and Braveheart.

In Gladiator they show a corrupt leader of Rome, but would it be corrupt if Maximus was the leader? That would be much better than having the lame senators running Rome. And of course in Braveheart the Scots should have made William their leader. If he was the leader he could have put the corrupt nobles in their place.

The purpose of the propaganda is to stop good people from wanting power. The people who have the real power now, the bankers and the media, are not threatened in the least by libertarians. But if there was a leader that was really for the people they know they would be put in their place.

In democracies money talks and those who can buy TV stations are the rulers. These rulers don't even claim to be for anything but their own profits and interests. People are much better off with a good leader who has power above the money power.

Here are some quotes from Mein Kampf:

"There were millions and millions of workmen who began by being hostile to the Social Democratic Party; but their defences were repeatedly stormed and finally had to surrender. Yet this defeat was due to the stupidity of the bourgeois parties, who had opposed every demand put forward by the working class. The short-sighted refusal to making an effort towards improving labour conditions, the refusal to adopt measures which would insure the workmen in case of accidents in the factories, the refusal to forbid child labour, the refusal to consider protective measures for female workers, especially expectant mothers--all this was of assistance to the Social Democratic leaders, who were thankful for every opportunity which they could exploit for forcing the masses into their net. Our bourgeois parties can never repair the damage that resulted from the mistake that was made. For they sowed the seeds of hatred when they opposed all efforts at social reform. And thus they gave, at least, apparent grounds to justify the claim put forward by the Social Democrats--namely that they alone stand up for the interest of the working class.
"And this became the principle ground for the moral justification of the actual existance of the Trades Unions, so that the labour organizations became from that time onwards the chief political recruiting ground to swell the ranks of the Social Democratic Party."

"the Jew seized upon the manifold possiblities which the situation offered him for the future. While on the one hand he organized capitalistic methods of exploitation to their ultimate degree of efficiency, he curried favour with the victims of his policy and his power and in a short while became the leader of their struggle against himself. 'Against himself' is here only a figurative way of speaking; for this 'Great Master of Lies' knows how to appear in the guise of the innocent and throw the guilt on others. Since he had the impudence to take a personal lead among the masses, they never for a moment suspected that they were falling prey to one of the most infamous deceits ever practiced. And yet that is what it actually was."

Democratic Party."

"the Jew seized upon the manifold possiblities which the situation offered him for the future. While on the one hand he organized capitalistic methods of exploitation to their ultimate degree of efficiency, he curried favour with the victims of his policy
and his power and in a short while became the leader of their struggle against himself. 'Against himself' is here only a figurative way of speaking; for this 'Great Master of Lies' knows how to appear in the guise of the innocent and throw the guilt on others. Since he had the impudence to take a personal lead among the masses, they never for a moment suspected that they were falling prey to one of the most infamous deceits ever practiced. And yet that is what it actually

was."

ALL TOO FALSE. Bush doubled the national debt in 8 years. Obama has increased it by about 10% because of the Great Bush Recession.

Cant have democracy without a rational electorate. Opinion is now the result of media manipulation.

Some of the rational few understand how corporate media foments controversy because the emotionality raises attention, ratings, and thereby profits from advertisers.

For instance, there are scores of websites reporting on medical marijuana that have no reports in the corporate mass media because it gets paid for selling patented pills, and you cant patent an herb.

We dont have the "free press" the Founding Farmers envisioned.

Back in 69, when the house next door became vacant, I told my friend Bill MacMurry, who moved in, and we had a joint open house party. The cops arrived, the search warrant had the wrong name and address, but no matter, the previous tenant, a cocaine dealer left drugs in the place Bill got arrested for.

The Tampa tribune put his face in the paper under the headline "Middle school teacher arrested for drugs." I wrote them the truth, but they would not print the truth. Their story was too emotionally juicy. So, I went to the USF college antiwar newspaper, who printed the truth.

The cops trashed the newspaper office in a drug search 3 weeks later. They did not find anything.

After I graduated, I moved to New Orleans where I thot it was less oppressive, and began writing for the antiwar newspaper there. That office was trashed twice by drug searches, and in the five years I lived there, they searched my residence 6 times.

Once, they came in on a Halloween party and arrested me for drugs guests dropped on the floor as the cops showed. The judge threw that case out of court. The other five times nothing was found.

After major surgery, I moved to the backwoods Ozarks. After Law enforcement searched my barn in 1998, I was sure there was a systemic problem. There was nobody there for an informer to get a tip on because my house had burned down and I'd moved away.

The Marshall Mountain wave took photos of the lab equipment and chemicals and called it "The biggest meth lab ever in NW Arkansas." Nothing illegal was found. But the story covered the front page of the newspaper. You begin to see the pattern, how the war on drugs creates newsworthy reports for the media? No matter that its bullshit.

Since then, there's been three more searches, and I've yet to got trial, which may finally happen 9/17/2010. Is the Bill of Rights worth more than the paper its printed on?

Details at http://daybrown.org and http://assetseizure.org Maybe the Internet can finally get thru to the public for the media sure wont.

Eisenhower was of German,English and Swiss ancestry. A Presbyterian in his later days,Mennonite in his childhood. No American President elected was of the Mosaic faith or origin. The only exception was a candidate- Barry Goldwater,but he lost. Go back to more reliable historical sources and see ,in case I'm wrong.

Berlusconi Jokes About Hitler At Youth Rally
VICTOR L. SIMPSON | 09/13/10 11:42 AM |

ROME — Italian Premier Silvio Berlusconi says young women should follow the money when looking for a partner, noting that women seem to like him and "I'm loaded."
Berlusconi, who was embroiled in a sex scandal last year and is known for his gaffes, also raised eyebrows with a joke about Hitler's followers urging him to return to power.
The billionaire businessman appeared at a convention Sunday of the youth wing of his People of Freedom party. When questioned by one of his Cabinet ministers – a woman – he joked about marriages of convenience, saying women were lining up for him because "I'm a nice guy" and "I'm loaded."
He also recalled a much-criticized TV interview he once gave, when "I said to a girl to look for a wealthy boyfriend. This suggestion is not unrealistic."
He also claimed women favor older men, thinking that "he's old. He dies and I inherit."
The 73-year-old Berlusconi was engulfed in a sex scandal last year centering on his purported dalliances with young women, including an escort. Berlusconi's wife Veronica Lario said last year she was seeking a divorce. They are now separated.
The media baron has said he is "no saint" but denied ever paying for sex.
In Italy, a divorce can only be sought after three years of separation. Media reports this summer suggested that Berlusconi's wife has rejected his early proposals for a financial settlement.
Berlusconi often gets criticized for his earthy sense of humor, and this time an opposition political demanded he apologize to Italy's Jewish community for his Hitler joke.

Before telling it, he said "I already know I am going to be criticized."
Berlusconi, who claims prosecutors have led corruption investigations against him because they are left-wing, also appeared to be poking fun at himself when commenting on the loss of his AC Milan soccer team on Saturday. He contended the referee robbed the team of three goals and that Milan often gets "leftist referees."

The law firm will allege that iBiquity presented HD radio as a system that's essentially a higher-fidelity version of the standard AM/FM radio experience, and then proceed to demonstrate that in actuality that's not really the case -- probably the biggest problem reported in the real world is that HD "lock" tends to come and go as one is driving around, and the "blend to analog" functionality in cases doesn't always work very well, making the listen experience annoying enough that many people will just force the radio into analog-only mode or switch to a different station.

It seems very unlikely the law firm could prevail, but when it comes to things like, "does HD radio work the way it was advertised to consumers?," there's so much subjectivity involved that it's anyone's guess. If the law firm can get enough people to sign on, going after iBiquity might just start to look worth the cost.

Personally, I'm betting the lawsuit will never proceed -- at best they'll be able to shakedown iBiquity a bit for an out-of-court settlement wherein the law firm makes millions and every HD radio owner gets a check for $5 or so.

I am disappointed that the FCC selected IBOC as the one and only AM/FM-band digital radio format all the entire U.S. without even requiring that iBiquity openly publish the complete on-air technical specification, much less trying to stimulate greater competition for the best possible technical standard in the first place. (IBOC uses some -- apparently minor -- variant of the AAC CoDec, which is a good choice, but their their OFDM modulation scheme doesn't seem to be as effective against multi-path interference as it really should be.) Effectively the FCC handed iBiquity a printing press for greenbacks, and even if that press can't run very fast, the FCC's actions still don't strike me as having been in the best interest of the populace.

Interesting - I said the same thing a few months ago and got roundly criticised...
http://james.cridland.net/blog/goodbye-radio-via-3g-we-cant-afford-you/

The costs are one thing; the quality of service quite another.
Streaming radio over AT&T in San Francisco simply isn't possible because the mobile networks are overloaded. I tried to listen to a moderately low-bitrate stream of FOX News Radio in the car - in the north of London - and it was impossible to keep the signal for more than a few minutes. It's fine to say that "it'll be fixed", but I can't see mobile internet being a reliable means of delivering radio for many years to come.

A few weeks ago, I bought an old metal security/burglar door for $15.00 from that democrap who lives behind that house next door to doggy's couch.That door is the kind of door that is made of thin wall square section tubes, up and down, y'all have seen those doors before.

So, a couple of weeks ago I brought that door around front to be sure it will fit up ok, it will.What it is, that door has some rust (Rust Never Sleeps) on it and that flimsy screen wire on that door is ripped and raggety.I am in the process now of fixing that door up so it will look as good as one of those new doors.What it was though, a couple of weeks ago when I brought that door around front, those democraps who live across the street from doggy's couch, they were laughing their democrap asses off at my door.

Looka here, this neighborhood isn't nowhere near as safe as it used to be, if ya get me drift? If somebody busts into their democrap house,,,, I AM GOING TO LAUGH MY IRISH ARSE OFF AT THOSE democraps!

Well, if you believe that the financial mess started on Clinton's watch (repeal of Glass-Stegal Act in 1999), I don't remember you complaining that Bush, who had EIGHT YEARS to correct the problem, did nothing in those EIGHT YEARS. Yet you complain that Obama has not fixed this horrendous inherited mess in a mere 20 months.

10%? Even a bit higher in certain states. Again, Obama INHERITED this avalanche rolling down the mountain from Bush. Please tell us what McCain (or you) would do to solve the biggest financial mess since the 1930s.

Huh? Other than the failed "underwear bomber" in Detroit, what terrorist attacks have there been? What could Obama (or McCain) have done about the underwear guy?

Um, maybe that is because there is now no money left over for space exploration due to Bush's Great Depression -- that Obama INHERITED.

It's a little late for that.

Where exactly does it say"very limited government"? If the government is the people why would they want to limit the people?

Although it is apparent that obama has traits/genetics of the Negroid races, does he claim to be a Negro? Or, does he refer to himself of another race, such as the Caucasoid or Caucasian race?

Microwave doesn't work mobile (except in helicopters and that one NBC car in Kuwait). Satellite has tons of delay and sucks for live conversations. Analog TV stations used to use the PRO channel, but that's gone. Some radio stations, e.g. KFI, use their two-way radio system for cue, but that is a secondary usage for the RPU bands. Some use cellular for foldback.

I guarantee you that the Clear Channel stations listed above are using it for non-delay air monitor for field reporters.

The Stoic principle is, that if the administrator is self controlled, then the student will learn self control. Teachers, or anyone else who was emotionally involved do not administer the spanking. That is done by the principle in his office.

That's not violence. A parent hitting a kid because the parent is angry is violence. But to teach the kid not to run in the street, is discipline.

Its worth noting the culture is a mix of long term farm families with 1st and 2nd generation Hippies who moved here wanting a healthy place to raise kids. We all get along just fine.

Most of the hard corps ignorant rednecks got into meth, and moved to the city where the welfare benefits are more generous and the liquor stores are closer. Van Buren county pop is 12,000. The Jail only holds 58, of which half are state and federal prisoners it is paid to keep.

Ergo, the incarceration rate of the population is 0.2%; compare that to where you live. One time, coming back from out of state at 3AM, I passed by the basketball court in Leslie. The ball laid on the grass at the edge of the court in case anyone wanted to play. Consider how long it'd take to be stolen where you live.

I dont have a house key. Even if I did lock it, out in the country, nobody'd hear the glass of a window being broken to get in. But there are no breakins I know about.

15 years ago, there was some stealing started. But folks realized where the truck that had the same tire print from the crime scenes was, and used a 30-30 to write an exit visa in the truck, with the implication that next time, we wont wait for it to be parked. The grandsons, who'd come to stay with grandpa, moved back to LA.

Back before agribusiness replaced family farms, it was like this all over rural America. The land here is too steep for the large contiguous tracts agribusiness likes.

As long as you have a Republic, people will hand over the reigns to the representatives to do the hard work. In exchange for having elected people to sit down and work out the hard and complex details of difficult legislation, power will be concentrated and expanded in places that you'd rather not see it. Such is the nature of a republic. People who believe otherwise are fooling themselves.

The only way to avoid this and maintain something other than a dictatorship, and it is a severely double-edged sword, is through direct Democracy. With that, the people make ALL the rules and bypass the middleman of the republic. But, beware - there is nothing more disjointed and cumbersome and damned downright confusing than a set of laws created by The People.

My guess is that both of these ideas work better on a very small scale - like in a town or a county. Once you get to the Statewide level, things start breaking down again, and at the national level - well, you see what we have.

You have to choose your poison, or go live in Antarctica.

No brain mccain has been a kiss-arse idiot his whole life long ... best thing he ever did for himself was get captured and live long enough to invoke the sympathy he could use to catapult himself into a nice cushy public servant position. Definitely not a man to run a country, definitely been a mistake in letting him represent a state, and shouldn't have ever made dog catcher ... but then, that is just my personal opinion.

Caucasoid is a misnomer. Many people from the Caucusus region do not look European at all. There were even some isolated African villages in Abkhazia at one time! That's right, and they have lived there for several centuries. The British scientist who coined the term caucasian was not a world traveller, but rather a bookworm !

Yes - they were much smaller than 2010 USA. A lot of history transpired between the Fall of Greece I and the Fall of Greece II !!!

Modern Greece is, I am afraid, in a position similar to California.
My theory - The European Union, of which they are now a part, holds the keys to the treasury and the money machine, much like the US Treasury. The larger conglomeration can print money if it needs to pay off its debts (albeit at an inflated rate), while the individual nation-state cannot do this (as Greece used to be able to do). Nether Greece nor California can print its own $$$ like the larger system, so they are in economic hot water.

The problem is, a lot of people confuse ethnicity with race. A prime example of this is mexico. Most in mexico are either no. American Indian or so. American Indian ... yet you ask one of these indians, on the street, "What they are?" and they will reply "spanish", they are about as spanish as my arse ...

0BaMa0 is their leader as Thug in Chief
The Liberal Fascists perpetuate their racism:

Race and Resentment

by Thomas Sowell

Recent stories out of both Philadelphia and San Francisco tell of black students beating up Asian American students. This is especially painful for those who expected that the election of Barack Obama would mark the beginning of a post-racial America.

While Obama's winning the majority of the votes in overwhelmingly white states suggests that many Americans are ready to move beyond race, it is painfully clear that others are not.

Those who explain racial antagonisms on some rationalistic basis will have a hard time demonstrating how Asian Americans have made blacks worse off. Certainly none of the historic wrongs done to blacks was done by the small Asian American population who, for most of their history in this country, have not had enough clout to prevent themselves from being discriminated against.

While ugly racial or ethnic conflicts can seldom be explained by rational economic or other self-interest, they have been too common to be just inexplicable oddities-- whether in America or in other countries around the world, and whether today or in centuries past.

Resentments and hostility toward people with higher achievements are one of the most widespread of human failings. Resentments of achievements are more deadly than envy of wealth.

The hatred of people who started at the bottom and worked their way up has far exceeded any hostility toward those who were simply born into wealth. None of the sultans who inherited extraordinary fortunes in Malaysia has been hated like the Chinese, who arrived there destitute and rose by their own efforts.

Inheritors of the Rockefeller fortune have been elected as popular governors in three states, attracting nothing like the hostility toward the Jewish immigrants who rose from poverty on Manhattan's Lower East Side to prosperity in a variety of fields.

Others who started at the bottom and rose to prosperity-- the Lebanese in West Africa, the Indians in Fiji, the Armenians in the Ottoman Empire, for example-- have likewise been hated for their achievements. Being born a sultan or a Rockefeller is not an achievement.

Achievements are a reflection on others who may have had similar, and sometimes better, chances but who did not make the most of their chances. Achievements are like a slap across the face to those who are not achieving, and many people react with the same kind of anger that such an insult would provoke.

In our own times, especially, this is not just a spontaneous reaction. Many of our educators, our intelligentsia and our media -- not to mention our politicians-- promote an attitude that other people's achievements are grievances, rather than examples.

When black school children who are working hard in school and succeeding academically are attacked and beaten up by black classmates for "acting white," why is it surprising that similar hostility is turned against Asian Americans, who are often achieving academically more so than whites?

This attitude is not peculiar to some in the black community or to the United States. The same phenomenon is found among lower-class whites in Britain, where academically achieving white students have been beaten up badly enough by their white classmates to require hospital treatment.

These are poisonous and self-destructive consequences of a steady drumbeat of ideological hype about differences that are translated into "disparities" and "inequities," provoking envy and resentments under their more prettied-up name of "social justice."

Asian American school children who are beaten up are just some of the victims of these resentments that are whipped up. Young people who are seething with resentments, instead of seizing educational and other opportunities around them, are bigger victims in the long run, whether they are blacks in the US or lower-class whites in the UK. A decade after these beatings, these Asian Americans will be headed up in the world, while the hoodlums who beat them up are more likely to be headed for crime and prison.

People who call differences "inequities" and achievements "privilege" leave social havoc in their wake, while feeling noble about siding with the less fortunate. It would never occur to them that they have any responsibility for the harm done to both blacks and Asian Americans.

- Where exactly does it say"very limited government"?

'Special Dave',

All Un-Alienable Rights That Are Not Vested in 'We The People'
* and clearly defined as the Duties of the Federal Government {Federation}
* are Reserved To The Individual {United} States . . .

-ergo- Limited Role* of the US Federal Government [.]

* Duties and Responsibilities {Functions}

- If the government is the people

-special-dave- 'We The People' -are- "We The People"

- why would they want to limit the people?

The US Federal Government is simply the 'limited' agent of "We The People"
-since- "We The People" reside in the Individual States except for 'DC'
-and- "We The People" are 1st and foremost are Citizens of those Individual States
-and- in-addition Citizen of the Federation of those States 'collectively' The USA.

The 'Primary Agent' of "We The People" are the 'Individual States' that we reside in . . .
NOT The US Federal Government which was collectively formed by the 'Individual States' as the 'Primary Agent' of "We The People" as a Collective Umbrella Organization for National Defense, International Diplomacy and Global Commerce.

Thank you, I know those, and they seem better than the MLB, but are too large and heavy for hanging up. The MLB is quite tiny and light.

I think in the past ICE made some versions that could be used in transmission.

I had asked RF-Systems if their MLB could be used for transmitting, they reiterated that the MLB is receive-only, but unofficially added that up to 5W RF was OK and wouldn't saturate the core.

I can confirm that a random wire + MLB + coax can be tuned up via a transmitter-side ATU and won't smoke on 5W.

More vagueness. I think you mean the states. The amendment before the one you attempted to quote says we have other rights, besides those listed in the Constitution and the Bill of Rights.

And "the people" manifests in our form of government as the House of Representatives.

I'll make a deal with you. If you agree to disband the military, except for a National Guard, I'll give up the Department of Education.

ha ha ha! And I'd like to add that I hadn't asked any question even remotely related to the pros and cons of the concept of broadband impedance matching between coax and random wire, how good this specific RF-System MLB un-un implementation was, detailed instructions for DIY alternatives, and the semantics of calling magnetic "balun" something that isn't so. Such replies push (s+n)/n to unity.

No. "Congress" and "the people" are specified separately and quite differently within the US Constitution, so they can't possibly refer to the same thing.

Furthermore, I can think of few things more antithetical to the people than the House of Representatives.

The founders must have been aware that such a situation could evolve, hence their repeated words "Congress shall make no law..."
-- surely the most important statement in the entire document.

Coupled with the Tenth Amendment, _that's_ limited government.

With every good wish,

Kevin.

You're setting up an "us vs. them" paradigm in which it's California vs. the rest of the US, as though we are somehow separate and not intertwined with the rest of the nation.

You know this is not true. What is good or bad for other states and regions can have comparably good and bad effects on California, and vice-versa.

Of course, you probably know which states rely most heavily on public funding from the feds - IIRC, the State that largely complains the most about big-brother type government - Alaska - is alos the biggest sink for federal fuinds per capita.
If we, and other "wealthy" (and I use the term loosely) states demanded and got our money all back in some form, places like Alaska would become third-world countries fast. That would not be good for the people there or the Republic.

As much as I dislike Alaskan politics, I want the people there to live satisfactory lives, and without the rest of us pitching in to help, it likely won't happen. As a Californian, I am happy to help out.

OK First -if- you are driving around in the same 'spot'

and can NOT receive your favorite AM & FM Station

?WHY? Would you expect your new Car/Truck with a new Digital [IBOC] AM & FM HD-Radio in that same 'spot' to be able to receive that same favorite AM & FM Radio Station ? ? ?

HELLO - IT AIN'T THE AM & FM RADIOS be they

...but in the US it's been this way since dirt. Each individual state is it's own "nation" so to speak, with its own government and issues to address, but the U.S. is Union of many states, is a supreme entity with an overarching legal framework (the Constitution) and is the one that prints the common currency. We here in the U.S. (especially conservatives, generally) complain that we don't want to be like, or be part of, the European Union, deeming it socialist and so forth - but in reality, the EU is based loosely on what the U.S. already is...a larger framework for the common good of all the member states.

California could, I suppose, print its own "greenbacks" to start to pay off its debts - I am not an economist per se, so I do not know what advantage that would gain us - but I doubt if it would work very well, as currency is supposed to be based on something, either gold or silver or other valuable commodity, which we do not have in abundance just now. Such is the case now with Greece - its drachmas are no longer much good by themselves.

Rationale? The ignorance and bullshit factor of that statement is self explanatory to anyone with a functioning brain.

But as both of you seem to lack that functioning brain, I will gladly explain just a little of the rationale as to why the statement is bullshit.

First:
For the statement to be even close to accurate, it would have to be morally reprehensible to spank a child, and it is far from it. You may not agree with it, but your narrow viewpoint does not dictate the morals for everyone. (and before you ask, I have found the need to spank my children.)

Second:
The following activities that involve physical contact would have to be banned on moral grounds, also:
-Football
-Rugby
-Lacrosse
-Water polo
-Wrestling
-Martial Arts
-Taekwondo,
-Jujutsu,
-Karate
-Ice hockey,
-Boxing of all kinds,
-Consensual S&M sex.
-Friendly wrestlling matches
---Just to name a few

Third:
The following activities that MIGHT RESULT in physical contact would have to be banned on moral grounds:
-Baseball
-Basketball
-Field hockey
-Netball
-Squash
-Golf
-Jogging
-Children playing (would have to ban playgrounds also...dangerous places)
-Any sex, period (which you obviously are not familiar with).
-Walking down the street.
-Going outside your house at any time.
---Just to name a very few.

Might as well outlaw that entire 'Right to Assemble', too, as their's always the possibility you might accidentally bump into someone.

Idiots.

Yol Bolsun, Grendel.

All that does is match the 50 Ohm transmitter to the 50 Ohm (or less) transmission line. It doesn't address the mismatch between the transmission line and the antenna at all.

Well perhaps it will be fixed perhaps it wont.

As far as coverage is concerned, It's still quite a new thing, it does take a long time to build out good coverage, so we shouldn't be surprised that coverage is still patchey. Hopefully they will carry on building out the networks. I also think they ought to make a mobile broadband device available that can connect to an external aerial. I think that could help a great deal with in car coverage.

As far as the networks being overloaded. The way I see it, mobile broadband has been a victim of it's own success. They probably introduced it as just another way to make money out of their 3G licenses, that they paid huge amounts of money for. But obviously mobile broadband has become so popular that the existing 3G networks are struggling to cope. Perhaps new tchnologies being developed will solve the problem. I'm not certain, but from what I've heard (mostly on this NG.) there are far more advanced systems than 3G available. I like to be optimistic, and hope that these new technologies will be rolled out and will fix the problems, but I do realise that if this does happen it is likely to take many years.

> than a few minutes. It's fine to say that "it'll be fixed", but I > can't see mobile internet being a reliable means of delivering radio > for many years to come.

It's just not going to happen. The congestion and coverage of the the 3G network is not going to be fixed by 4G, network use will continue to go up as smart phones proliferate and data services are extended even to prepaid phones. Whether for better or for worse, we're going to see less and less unlimited data and more congestion pricing.

It's not rocket science to understand that the number of point to point connections for streaming audio (or video) is limited and that it's a poor way of utilizing bandwidth.

For both satellite and terrestrial radio the advantage is that a limited amount of bandwidth can serve everyone that wants to listen to that broadcast.

As one expert in radio stated:

"The basic radio infrastructure where one tower covers an infinite number of listeners is a lot more efficient way to deliver audio than a point-to-point connection that you need with the Internet. People are starting to get that. Weï¿½re seeing not only the capacity issues but also starting to see variable pricing plans."

Pandora is very worried about this. They've been putting on a brave face, claiming that the 2GB limit that AT&T has imposed does not represent a problem, but they don't talk about those that are buying the $15 200MB data plan, which is the big seller to those that were avoiding smart phones when they had to pay $30 a month for unlimited data.

Actually, for now, HD Radio often has the same issue as mobile streaming because at the lower power levels it's often hard to hold onto a station as you're driving. But this is temporary, and as HD stations increase their power levels the coverage will improve greatly. Also, while a majority of urban stations have upgraded to HD, there still isn't a lot of rural HD coverage. So satellite radio still has its niche.

Funny, your very first post contained, "I am rebuilding my 15+ yr old longwire+MLB antenna due to broken coax etc etc. ... "

Then, you just shoot a lot of amps though wire that was NEVER meant to take the amps, this is obvious by the manufacturer saying not to run 5 watts though it. And, I have never ran a heavy, magnetizing current, though a toroid to see attempting to turn my core into a magnet would suddenly be "a good idea."

Etc., etc. But, I will agree you didn't ask ... you just did a lot of pretty nutty stuff ... so now you have an old corroded balun which you have exceeded current on, heated the winding and their insulating coating to gawd knows what temp, are counting on all this making good contact on corroded joints, etc., etc.

And then you are afraid what someone said may "sound nuts?" ROFLOL
Now, let me see if I see anything wrong with all that?

I think rebuild it properly, or buy a new one, or build a new one, etc., etc. are all better than what you seem to be proud of ... but hey, that is just me ... and I admit it ...

Both primate field studies and neurological lab work reveal that pain will alter the hormone profile. You can do the same with drugs, but I dunno of any longitudinal study on the ultimate effect of people who grew up on Ritalin or whatever.

But history, all the way back to the Roman Stoics, is full of examples of pain being properly applied to, as we now know, lower the testosterone level and reduce the impulsivity caused by adrenalin, and make the boy pay attention. They didnt have ADD problems then, and I dont see it now among the farm boys who know where the woodshed is.

Robt Kaplan, in his study of the military, "Imperial Grunts" reports that half the Green Berets grew up on family farms. You'd think the Brass would notice, but they are too busy with deals for the military industrial complex.

The fundamental diff I see that is not picked up on is that pain that is inflicted without self control is abuse, but with it, is a time tested method of adjusting attitudes. Course, you can adjust attitudes with meth also.

As for the snide remark about getting a D in gym, it shows ignorance of what modern farm life is like now. You dont stay in the family business by being that stupid. Agribusiness and govt policy has driven all but the most diligent and intelligent family farms out of business. That has something to do with why these hill towns have grades that are 1/2 year ahead of the national average.

I read the average farmer is now 61 years old. Recently, I noted an old man with two young helpers he was apparently teaching how to string fence. Afterwards, I noticed its a real professional job.

But sometimes ponder the fact that both young helpers were women. Women run the forklifts and log skidders at the saw mill. I see them behind the parts counter, and they know where the hydraulic fluid is, or what a combination wrench looks like.

Yes you can make the statement, but you dont have any science to back it up. Nor history. Epictetus:"The boy who learned to control slaves (and today they are electronic), does not learn to control himself."

I've spanked a toddler to keep him from going in the street and getting run over. At this age, reasoning with him is not effective.

In the hill town schools, if a boy is disruptive, the teacher calls the office and enough other people arrive to take him in hand, literally picking him up. This is primate instinctive behavior at work. Soon as the boy is up off his feet, he realizes there is power greater than his will to try to dominate and control others.

The spanking itself is merely the apex of a psychological process which only takes a few seconds. Without it, such bullies would be physically abusing smaller kids. Totally avoiding what you say is abuse is not possible. Controlling it is, and while you may use drugs, I am very concerned because there are no long term studies of the effect.

You got any kids we can try drugs out on?

Its instructive that you resort to ad hominem. The science is that properly administered pain adjusts hormone levels, and with that the behavior which risks abuse of other kids stops. Now, if you have any other research besides your anal orifice, I'd be glad to see it.

Science? Like basic compassion is scientific?

How nice of you. You would have been better off to actually watch the toddler to begin with. I see too many parents who let their kids out of their restraint and then blame the kid. Same with pets. The parents need the spanking for being reckless.

As long as it isn't violent, I'm OK with it.

Parents create bullies...parents can stop them. If they do not, then you expel the kid until the parents figure it out.

I would NEVER use drugs on kids and I have no idea why you insist on this even more irresponsible alternative.

Where's YOUR science?

> You got any kids we can try drugs out on?

Blah blah blah.

I responded with EXACTLY the kind of ad-hominem that the prior poster used.

Link, please? Meanwhile -

My Dad swatted me a few times. It taught me that my Dad had a limited imagination and a strong hand. To this day, I do not believe I did anything to earn those swats, and I have never used corporal punishment on my child, who:

~ Does not run in the street
~ Does not bully others
~ Neither needs nor used drugs, legal or otherwise ~ Does good work in school
~ Works very well in a team or independently ~ Is basically respectful to others
~ Knows he can trust me
~ Has no black and blue marks like I did.

It was never, ever, necessary. There are other ways besides violence.

Ah, but YOU DID NOT SPECIFY that in your original statement. Let me remind you that your statement was "It is wrong to strike another, except when in fear of immediate threat to life and limb." You didn't leave any room for any 'voluntary' or 'incindentals' in it.

Thus, making it a bullshit statement.

I dont' bash anyone (except for occasionally bashing some idiot over the head with his own 'logic'). My wife's first marriage was abusive, so she is understandably parnoid about such. She would have never married me if I had been abusive in any form (rightly so). Any man who hits his wife in anger is a low-life who should be put to death. The same with as with any parent to hits a child in anger or abuses them in any way.

A spanking to get a child's attention is not abuse.

Again, you did not have any such qualifications in your original statement. Go back and read what you wrote. You did not state that itis wrong to strike another, expecp when in fear of immediate life and limb OR if they are okay with it OR can reasonably see the possibility. You stated that it is wrong to strike another, except when in fear of immediate threat to life and limb. Well, I'm sure that some golfer does not think that getting beaned with a club when he gets too close to a swing as 'being in fear of immediate threat to life and limb', so using your 'logic' it should be banned.

We're not talking about 'getting abused by your parents'. We're talking about spanking, or corporal punishment, if you will. I suggest you look up the definition of 'corporal punishment' before you start throwing around words such as 'abuse' (and no, they are not synonymous).

I'm sure you find some parent who allowed his or her child to become horribly burned by tipping over a boiling pot of water morally superior that the parent who smacked the childs hand and said "NO" when he/she reached for the pot. That'll learn the little bastard.

Contact sports offer the EXCUSE for violence. Bull riding exists cause people hope to watch a man die. Bulls, quite literally, get away with murder. Course, there's those who are repelled by the whole idea of violence. With some kids, taking "time out" or making them stand in the corner actually works. We expect adults to have good judgment and not rely on politically correct thinking.

> http://www.sciencedaily.com/releases/2009/06/090605123237.htm
discusses DNA markers. Which we know are more common in some gene pools and we see higher levels of violence in them. We also know there is a generally higher level of testosterone, which increases at an earlier age, higher adrenalin, and lower seratonin and dopamine.

The latter are statistically linked to substance abuse. Alcohol is metabolized differently in those who become alcoholics. We need to warn the kids with these DNA markers, and warn women about the men who have behavior that is indicative of the problem.

These problems are handed down on the Y chromosome, and are seen in all races, altho some moreso than others. The Nordic seem to have the lowest rates which is why they can run socialism so well.

Spare the rod and spoil the child.

On average...Who would know better how to raise your kids?
The parents of the kids... or some 'family services' cops dragging your kids away at the behest of some naturalized mexican case worker?

I personally know many parents who have no clue whatsoever how to raise kids. The kids are hellions and the parents are oblivious to the world. Often on illicit drugs or just plain stupid pills, they just don't give a damn. They should be sterilized.

Recently I sent a reception report to Radio France I. at two separate addresses, both of which were listed as addresses for RRs and verifications in the last edition of Passport to WBR (2009):

Radio France International English Service
B.P. 9516
F-75016 Paris Cedex 16
France

...and...

TeleDiffusion de France
Direction de la Production et des Methodes Service Ondes Courtes
10 Rue d'Oradour sur Glane
75732 Paris Cedex 15
France

The first address snagged me a response with a verification letter a couple of months ago (of sorts - very boilerplate). Today I just received my original unopened envelope from the second address with an affixed stamp that is checked "Refused" on it - so I assume that the second address either does not currently exist, or does not currently even want mail (at least from outside France).

Seriously, you have to know when and where to DX. Last week I worked the Phillipines and a 2nd station in Mongolia over a 2 day period on 20 meters. One at sunrise and one at sunset and they were both strong - picked up with just a dipole in SE MI.

- You're setting up an "us vs. them" paradigm in which it's California
- vs. the rest of the US,
- as though we are somehow separate and not intertwined with the rest of
- the nation.
- You know this is not true.

That is right : 'not true -cause- I did not say anything about an "Us-versus-Them" pair-of-dimes ;;-}}

In the Federation of States know as the USA :
Each of the States is an Equal Partner and 'Collectively those States are a 'Union'.

- What is good or bad for other states and
- regions can have comparably
- good and bad effects on California, and vice-versa.

And . . . a $50B Yearly Ecomonic Rape of the State of California for Decades is 'good' for the State of California and 'The Union' of All States ?

- Of course, you probably know which states
- rely most heavily on public funding from the feds -
- IIRC, the State that largely complains the most
- about big-brother type government - Alaska -

Yes Alaska gets back $1.88 for each and every $1.00 it sends to the US Federal Government.

- is alos the biggest sink for federal fuinds per capita.

Yes that is a 'per-capita' number so a state like Alaska with a relatively small population can 'appear' to be getting a Big Wind Fall when the Collective Dollar Total is actually smaller than other States.

- If we, and other "wealthy" (and I use the term
- loosely) states demanded and got our money
- all back in some form, places like Alaska would
- become third-world countries fast.

California with Billions of US Dollars of Deficit Spending per Year : IS NOT HEALTHY [.]

Don't Want Any of My US Tax Dollars to go to Any Third World Countries when My Own State is Billions of Dollars of Deficit Spending in the Red each Year.

- That would not be good for the people there or
- the Republic.

The US Constitution calls for the the US Federal Government to 'Promote The General Welfare' and it is My-Opinion that 'Promoting The General Welfare' Begins at Home First : In the State of California :
Once California is Economically Healthy again {has Good General Welfare} then we can share with the Rest of the "Union".

- As much as I dislike Alaskan politics, I want
- the people there to live satisfactory lives, and
- without the rest of us pitching in to help,

Would you be saying the same thing if it were a 'southern' State ?

No Where in the US Constitution did I read that All Member States Had to be Equal in all things.

- it likely won't happen.

Give the Alaska Lands over to the State of Alaska and allow the Citizens of Alaska to Decide and Manage their Natural Resources for themselves.

- As a Californian, I am happy to help out.

As a California : I say "California Heal Thy Self !"
Help California First -by- Helping California First
-by- Spending Our California US Federal Tax Dollars right hear in the State of California to Re-Build the Economy of California and General Welfare of the Citizens of the State of California.

CONgress has been making unconstitutional law for many decades. First there's the flagrant violation of the Second Amendment by regulating WHO may own or carry a gun. They've been doing that one for a very long time, and they just keep slipping in more BS under the flag of protecting the public. Protecting the public is the job of the police, not the CONgress passing unconstitutional law.

Then there's due process, double jeopardy and ex-post-facto. They get around that by saying the law is not punitive, but "regulative". And the SCOTUS goes right along with it.

Notes :

For Whatever Reason : I can 'receive' AFN Guam [WestPac] but can not hear AFN Hawaii which is closer to the California Foothills -while- I used to here AFN Hawaii very well from Oakland, CA;
just a few years ago.

AFN Key West can be heard sometimes . . .

Heard AFN Diego Garcia once or twice here in California on 4319 kHz USB around Sun-Rise.
http://www.eibi.de.vu/
4,329 kHz USB -Over-Night-
Start : 13:00 UTC & End : 03:00 UTC
12,579 kHz USB -All Day-
Start : 03:00 UTC & End : 15:00 UTC
-both- AFN Diego Garcia, BIOT are 7-Days a Week in English with ERP : 3 KW and "ND" Antenna
http://www.eibi.de.vu/

Meaning that there is a 2-Hour over-lap from 13:00 to 15:00 UTC for the both Frequencies. to switch back-and-forth on . . . and 'listen'...
That AFN Diego Garcia is "On" from :
6 AM to 8 PM Local PDT in the Spring/Summer
5 AM to 7 PM Local PST in the Fall/Winter That's 1 to 2 Hours in the Morning 'before' and around Sunrise and the 'Gray-Line' for me here in the California Foothills.

-so- I Tune-In to 4319 kHz [USB] at 5 AM PST and just start to . . . l - i - s - t - e - n - * . . .

You're right.

And the illegal usurpation of power has been going on for a very long time, with huge spikes of illegal "law-making" occurring during and after major wars. Practically everything the regime in Washington does now is unconstitutional.

It's gone beyond illegality and actually reached the point of insanity now.

At one time, I opined that these pretended "laws" ought to be void because, among many other reasons, there were so many of them that no one person could ever even read them all in a single lifetime, let alone understand or obey them. (This excess of "laws," by the way, converts us from a government of laws into a government of men -- men who can cherry pick a victim and then cherry pick a "law" to charge him with violating, since all have violated some. Tax laws are among their favorites in this regard.)

But it's worse now. Multiple-thousand-page "laws" are passed by legislators who never even bother to read them. And really, they couldn't even if they wanted to -- there are too many. It's beyond insane, beyond Kafkaesque. May the gods end it all soon.

With all good wishes,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

Why stop with the Constitution? 210 years ago people were generally a lot smarter than they are now. Hell, look at the way they talked.

I'm all for returning to the principle that only Congress can declare war. I'm also for confiscatory taxes to prevent family dynasties and concentration of power at the top. I'm for import duties to protect domestic industry and for the abolition of standing armies. And the pre-Marbury v Madison Supreme Court.

When you start pinin' for the good old days where do you stop?

You make many good points, though I am very leery of giving anyone, especially the criminals in Washington, the power to 'confiscate' anything. That, in addition to being theft in most cases, would just increase the power of a different and probably much worse gang. Better to make C.H. Douglas's Social Dividend the means of creating money -- instead of the banks. That way we make sure that the wealth that is truly social gets spread around -- without violating anyone's rights or giving more power to Washington -- and we simultaneously reduce the power of the money-men to near zero, where it should be.

I'm not "pining" for anything -- but the founders had some things right: 1) drastically limit the power of government; 2) make sure that the rabble of the cities can never vote themselves "benefits"; and 3) define the nation as a biological entity, not a geographic or ideological one.

With every good wish,

Kevin.

I find Jerry Brown was less offensive. He's a political animal, but I'm pretty sure he's been assimilated by Dr. Leary. I don't trust Whitman and will vote against her.

Sigh - I will also. The last thing we need is a billionaire who buys the election and then pretends she knows anything about what rank-and-file Californians want or need.

Explanation :

The second address is an address of the registered office of TDF and no mail should be sent to this address, it was not a mailing address.
The correct address at that time was : 21/27 rue Barbes, 92120 Montrouge, France.

Since the early 80s, TDF has moved several times and currently is the correct address actually to send a mail is :
TDF, 106 avenue Marx Dormoy, 92541 Montrouge Cedex, France as mentionned is the Word Radio TV Handbook :-)

But I'm afraid that you have problems to obtain informations about transmissions. For over 20 years, TDF has gone from an utility state company to a private company and it consider that it serves its customers (public radios and televisions) and not listeners or viewers and generally do not want to give them informations, that are considered as confidentials.

"Blind trusts" is the word they use - it may be a poor descriptor, but

Trust The Blind : To See The Truth

You get to Pick the Trustees or Managing Company Simply Means that you do not Directly Management Your Money -but- Someone else Does.

The Theory Is : That The Trustees Do Not Have the Knowledge that 'you' do {Government Secrets & Insider Info} to go around and Buy and Sell your Assets to your benefit by using this 'Insider Info'.

-but- Should you use a Lawyer as a private 'conduit' between you and the Trustees . . . it's all good . . .

Thanks very much for the info!

I was stationed at Andersen AFB in Guam, so I'm always keen to try and hear Guam and other AFN stations. No joy on hearing Guam yet.

What I would like to see is each city and town propose a candidate for a state public servant office. These individuals then have a "run off" on a county level. And, those individuals, one from each county, are placed on the state ballot and the states citizens vote.

Same would be done with federal public servant offices, only an individual from each state would hit the federal ballot.

Tax dollars could be used, it would be immensely cheaper than the way it is done now and should be much more honest and harder for the shadow government to be able to only have their candidates on the ballots ...

If not the above system, then a similar one ... but something needs to be done. The way it is now, we are certain to be limited to only voting for chosen crooks which serve their masters, and those master are NOT the American people ...

JS

Sounds just like the last meeting of the White Citizens Council. This is what the tea baggers want, they would love to return to the days when the white man ran this country and then that commie Dr. King came along. Now for the love of mercy, we have an African-American president! And he wants to stop our war machine! What the heck happened?

It was so much better when women were chained to their beds.....

The last time I looked, it took many (3-5) fewer years to get a legitimate and accrediited doctorate in science and engineering than it did in the humanities. Therefore, it is easier to get a technical PhD.

That is not what I wrote. I stated that it took a lot less time to get a PhD in science and engineering (true 20 years ago, and probably still true). I drew the conclusion that it is easier to get a

Christine O'Donnell is one of my Heros.

John King, USA program on CNN TV.
Somebody was interviewing that democrap B HO Butt Kisser in Braddock,Pennsylvania.That democrap woman said she voted for B HO.

More and more people in America are living on welfare, food stamps, food pantries, more and more people in America are at, or below the poverty

She said she voted for B HO, she ought to be happy now.She is not Don't make me responsible for anything you write or don't. Don't question if I care what you write, or what you don't; I won't and I don't.

My previous post states what I find the facts you state prove ... but, let me make it clearer. There are far more damn idiots in the arts, music, philosophy, etc. These are NOT exact sciences; much is left open to "interpretation." It is only logical that a phd in such fields would not be such a task as would exist in the exact sciences; However, this is off balanced by the lower IQs which these individuals pursuing these fields tend to display ... so, simply put, it takes the dummies longer!

Well, yes; compassion comes from the ability to empathize. Alphas dont have it, never had the problem. Field studies show how the betas and females need to read the body language of alphas to as to brace themselves for the blow or get out of the way. Goodall et all shows how betas place themselves between alphas and the more vulnerable. They are the same size and can take the abuse.

Course, the alphas go toe to toe against other warriors, and if they felt the pain they inflict would not be as effective. DNA shows daughters of alphas abuse and abandon young, and video shows betas, both male and female adopt. Your position seems to think everyone is beta.
They are not, as the website below shows.

"A Not So Perfect Match" by 60 minutes was about a rape suspect, whose DNA did not quite match. But then, they looked at the DNA of his male kin, and there found the perfect match.

There are, no doubt, lotsa men in prison who looked similar enuf to get convicted; I'm all for looking at the DNA in every case, but then going on to look at the DNA of his male kin if the sample from the evidence is very similar. We need to get the real perps off the streets and quit abusing the rights of innocents who merely look the same.

I dont deny there are way too many parents lacking self control. I'd be all for stopping them from breeding. Roman Senator Seneca:"We see, in illustrious family lines how the virtues are inherited. Why then, would we not also expect the virtues?" And Plato records a conversation with Socrates and a young man from such an illustrious line where Socrates takes note and says so.

Conversely, we have Machiavelli saying a litigant "came from a line of liars and thieves that goes back 500 years in the court records of Padua. This same thing is seen in rural areas where family lines have lived for several generations. In my neck of Ozark woods, we all know which lines produce the honest hard working family men, and which has the drunks and now the meth heads. But you only see this if the area has a limited population where you get to know everyone.

Well yes, sometimes kids are expelled. But then the kid never learns. The official policy keeps the kid in school, but he does not abuse other kids, and learns to get along even if parents cant teach him.

I dont insist on it, its what is being done to disruptive kids. Nobody asked me if they should use drugs.

I dont doubt abuse has been used as an excuse for discipline. That's why those who are emotionally involved never administer the punishment.

As for the science, that begins with the field studies of primates.
Which show us the alpha males commit all the serious violence. You mite look at "Demonic Males" by Wrangham & Peterson, on the Chimp, Gorilla, Orangutan, and Bonobo. The first three are all dominated by alpha males and have even deadly forms of violence- murder, kidnapping, rape, and infanticide. But the latter is run by a sisterhood of elder females and does not have any serious violence. There's no violent struggle for alpha male status. The males dont try to control the sexuality of females.

FRONTLINE, The woman's Kingdom, on the Musuo of SW China, shows us a similar hominid culture run by the grandmothers. They dont have marriage. Men who dont own women, dont fight over them. The rape and murder rate is so low they dont have words for it.

The more misogynistic a culture is, the more alpha males, and the more violent. Religions have been crafted with an alpha male tyrant concept of god to justify and forgive the violence.

Bloodwork shows us alphaism is handed down in the Y chromosome, and
http://www.sciencedaily.com/releases/2009/06/090605123237.htm
the markers are found in hominid gene pools as well. But some gene pools have higher percentages of alphas. which is why they tend to rely on draconian force and tyranny. Betas can compromise.

Strange, I heard a little voice as I was reading your post; It said,

Agreed; but its not upta me. It usta be different with large families and the eyes of kids watching parents interact with siblings. There were always witnesses. Now, with only one or two in a family, there's not enuf eyeballs watching whats going on.

The alternative is to return to the village model, where the elders are there keeping an eye on what parents are doing. They have always raised the kids of incompetent parents because such people may have other skills or DNA markers for immune response the community needs.

I've often suggested subsidized fertility clinic services so we can weed the violent jackasses out of the gene pool. The Musuo dont breed violent men, and the rape and murder rates are so low they dont have words for it.

The natural habitat for Native Europeans is the Aryan agrarian village of 150-300 people in several communal houses like the Musuo still use.

There are no nuclear family homes where abuse can go on in private. Neither Aryans nor Musuo had marriage; After puberty rites at 14, the Musuo gets a room, not a house. Who has sex with who in that room is nobody else's business.

Like Sparta, the grandmothers own all the houses and what we now call 'commercial infrastructure'. There are no rich men, much less strangers with candy. Men who instinctively want to dominate others move out where hotties can be had more cheaply.

None of the above used gold or silver for jewelry or other forms of easily portable wealth. This made them hard and unprofitable targets. In the communal house, there were always niteowls keeping the fire going and alert to any intrusion. Nobody got ripped off. In villages of this size, there was no thievery because everyone knew what everyone else owned. There were no pawn shops.

Aryan men who were too lacking in character to get laid left for other gene pools, like the Semites, where a man's character didnt matter, only his power and money.

Chapter 1: Financing the 1933 Elections
On the cold winter weekend of January 28, 1933, Germany was officially without a government. Chancellor Kurt von Schleicher and his cabinet had resigned on Saturday afternoon, and eighty-six-year-old President von Hindenburg had not yet appointed a new chancellor. A nervous tension spread over Berlin. Everyone waited for news; most felt Germany was at an historic turning point.
Who would be the next chancellor? Hitler - the leader of the largest party, the Nazis, who pledged to destroy democracy? Papen - the aristocratic horseman who had been chancellor before Schleicher, but who had no popular following? Perhaps Schleicher again, if he could persuade the Social Democrats, the second largest political party in the country, to join him in a coalition? Governing Germany in the middle of an economic depression with nine million unemployed was not an enviable task. The country had just had three different chancellors in rapid succession. By tradition, the leader of the largest party was usually appointed chancellor. But the Nazis had been the largest party for over a year, and so far intrigues and political maneuvering had succeeded in keeping Hitler out of power. Everyone guessed what a Hitler government would mean. He had not kept his militarism, anti-Semitism, and dictatorial ambitions a secret.
Political intrigues were so numerous that weekend that no one really knew what was going on. Sensational rumors were being spread throughout the city. Some said an army coup was imminent, that Schleicher and the generals were about to abduct President von Hindenburg and declare martial law. There were also rumors of an armed Nazi uprising and a general strike by the socialist workers.
Hitler and Hermann Goering, the second most powerful man in the Nazi party, stayed up all night on Sunday, January 29, trying to figure out what Hindenburg might do. It was not until after 10 A.M. on Monday that Hitler received a summons to the president's office. Even at that point, the Nazis were not certain whether Hitler would be appointed chancellor or Hindenburg would ask him to serve as vice-chancellor. Across the street from the Chancellery, in the Kaiserhof Hotel, Hitler's lieutenants were waiting, unsure of what was going on. Goebbels, the Nazi propaganda chief, said:

In the street the crowd stands waiting between the Kaiserhof and the Chancellery. We are torn between doubt, hope, joy and despair. We have been deceived too often to be able, wholeheartedly, to believe in the great miracle. [S.A.] Chief of Staff Roehm stands at the window (with binoculars) watching the door of the Chancellery from which the Fuehrer [the leader, Hitler] must emerge. We shall be able to judge by his face if the interview was a success. Torturing hours of waiting.
At last, a car draws up in front of the entrance. The crowd cheers. They seem to feel that a great change is taking place....
A few moments later, he is with us. He says nothing. His eyes are full of tears. It has come! The Fuehrer is appointed Chancellor. He has already been sworn in by the President of the Reich. All of us are dumb with emotion. Everyone clasps the Fuehrer's hand....Outside the Kaiserhof, the masses are in a wild uproar....The thousands soon become tens of thousands. Endless streams of people flood the Wilhelmstrasse. We set to work...at once.
Hitler's victory was not a complete one by any means. He had been appointed chancellor in a coalition government. Papen was to be his vice-chancellor, and all the powerful cabinet posts were held by Papen's conservative allies, rather than the Nazis. But at the moment, Hitler's followers weren't worried about the details; for them the only thing that mattered was that Hitler was chancellor. They had come to power! All day, crowds gathered in the square outside the Kaiserhof Hotel and the Chancellery.
At dusk Nazi storm troopers in their brown uniforms gathered in the Tiergarten park, along with men of the Stahlhelm, an ultranationalistic veterans' organization, for a torchlight victory parade through the center of Berlin. As soon as it was dark, they came marching by the thousands through the Brandenburg Gate, carrying swastika flags and the black, white, and red flags of the German empire. Bands marched between the units, beating their big drums as the men sang old German military songs. But as each band came to the Pariser Platz, where the French embassy was located, they stopped whatever they were playing and, with an introductory roll of drums, broke into the tune of the challenging war song "Victorious We Will Crush the French."

was, wrote one German reporter, "a night of deadly menace, a nightmare in...blazing torches."
As the marchers came by the Chancellery, there were tumultuous cheers for Hitler, who stood in an open window saluting them. He was so excited that night, he could hardly stand still. He was raising his arm up and down heiling, smiling, and laughing so much, his eyes filled with tears. "It was an extraordinary experience," recalled Papen, who was standing behind Hitler. "The endless repetition of the triumphal cry: 'Heil, Heil, Sieg Heil!' rang in my ears like a tocsin." When Hitler turned to speak with Papen, his voice choked with emotion. "What an immense task we have set for ourselves, Herr von Papen - we must never part until our work is accomplished." Hitler and Papen were much closer allies than anyone at the time imagined.
It was after midnight when the parade ended. Being too excited to sleep, Hitler, Goering, Goebbels, and a few other Nazis sat up talking for hours. They could hardly believe it had actually happened: they were in the Chancellery at last. That evening, Hitler said to Goebbels, "No one gets me out of here alive." It was one of the few promises he kept.
On the morning of January 31, Hitler's storm troopers gave the German people a glimpse of what Nazi rule would be like. All over Germany, thugs in brown shirts took possession of the streets and roughed up Communists, socialists, and Jews; they chased socialist mayors and officials out of government buildings and even broke into the private homes of their political enemies. When people complained to Papen, he laughed. "Let the storm troopers have their fling." Among his friends at the Herrenklub, an exclusive gentlemens club, he boasted: "We've hired Hitler." To a skeptic he replied: "What do you want? I have Hindenburg's confidence. Within two months we will have pushed Hitler so far in the corner that he'll squeak."
The facts seemed to support Papen's optimism. Not only did Papen have Hindenburg"s confidence, but in fact the old president had promised never to receive Hitler unless he was accompanied by his vice-chancellor. Papen also held the important post of minister-president of Prussia, Germany's largest and most powerful state. From the composition of the cabinet, it seemed all the real power was in the hands of the conservatives: the aristocratic General von Blomberg was minister of defense, Baron von Neurath, a career diplomat, was foreign minister, and the old archreactionary Hugenberg was both minister of economics and minister of agriculture. The Nazis were outnumbered six to two.
The two Nazis in the cabinet, Wilhelm Frick and Goering, held posts that were thought to be insignificant. Frick was minister of the interior, but he did not control the police, which in Germany was under the jurisdiction of the individual state governments. Goering was made minister without portfolio, but with the promise that he would be minister of aviation as soon as Germany had an air force. He was also named minister of the interior of Prussia, an office that did not receive much notice by the public but did control the Prussian police.

The aristocrats and gentlemen of the Right who made up the majority of Hitler's cabinet hated the concept of democracy even more than the Nazis did. These men belonged to the old ruling class of the kaiser's Germany. They wanted to regain their old position of supremacy, lost in 1918. They wanted to restore the monarchy, suppress the socialist unions, avenge the loss of World War I, and make Germany the dominant power in Europe. It was obvious why such reactionary nationalists helped put Hitler in power: their goals and his were very similar.
Few people knew the full extent of Papen's collaboration with Hitler. Historians have said he "did more than anyone else outside the Nazi party to help Hitler to power." Papen helped Hitler because he was trying to control him and use the Nazis for his own aims.
Papen was a handsome aristocratic-looking man with distinguished gray hair and an officer's mustache. From an impoverished family of the Westphalian nobility, he became a General Staff officer, a skillful horseman, and a man of great charm. After a successful marriage to the daughter of a wealthy Saar industrialist, he bought a large block of shares in the Center party's newspaper, Germania. For a short time in 1932, Papen was chancellor, but his government had no popular support.
Papen believed it would be rather easy for an aristocratic officer like himself to manipulate a former corporal, like Hitler, and thus be able to use the Nazi's mass following to accomplish the aims of the upper-class conservative nationalists.
Hitler immediately began to outmaneuver his conservative colleagues. He reported to the cabinet that the Center party was making impossible demands and could not be counted on to form a coalition with the Nazis and the Nationalists that would have a majority in the Reichstag. Because of this situation, Hitler argued he would have to call for new elections. The only "demand" the Center party made was that Hitler promise to govern constitutionally, but none of the other members of the cabinet bothered to check Hitler's statement. They agreed to new elections on the condition that Hitler promise that the composition of the cabinet would not change regardless of the outcome of the voting.
New elections would provide Hitler with a chance to improve on the poor results the Nazis had received at the polls the past November. If the Nazis won a clear majority in the elections, they might be able to get rid of their coalition partners. Hitler had every reason to believe the election campaign would be a big success. The entire machinery of government, including the radio, was now under Nazi control and could be used for campaigning. The party had been flooded with new applicants for membership since he had become chancellor. In the cabinet meeting on February 2, Hitler discussed his preparations for the elections. Wilhelm Frick, the Nazi minister of the interior, proposed that the government set aside a million marks for the election campaign. Count von Schwerin von Krosigk, the minister of finance, rejected this suggestion. Hitler did not force the issue. He would have to get the money elsewhere.
The theme of the Nazi election campaign was to be the fight against communism. Hitler opened the attack in a late-night radio broadcast to the nation on February 1. He blamed the hard times Germany had gone through since 1918 on the Social Democrats, which had been the largest party in the Reichstag during most of those years. The Social Democrats, he reminded his listeners, were actually a Marxist party. "Fourteen years of Marxism," he said, "have ruined Germany; one year of bolshevism [communism] would destroy her. The richest and fairest territories of the world would be turned into a smoking heap of ruins. Even the sufferings of the last decade and a half could not be compared to the misery of a Europe in the heart of which the red flag of destruction has been hoisted." He went on to promise to put the unemployed back to work and save the peasants from bankruptcy.

On his fourth day in office, just after opening the election campaign, Hitler took time off to attend a very important dinner. He had been invited to the home of General von Hammerstein, chief of staff of the army, to meet the leading officers of the army and navy. In a speech that lasted almost two hours, Hitler explained his plans for rebuilding German military power.
The generals were the real power in Germany during the Weimar period. After World War II, many Germans tried to cover up the role certain members of the Officer Corps had played in helping to put Hitler in power. Many historians naively accepted this view, but the real story is quite different. Traditionally, the German Army ruled from behind the scenes and had the final "power to veto" any important issue. After the loss of World War I, the Versailles Treaty severely restricted the size of the German Army. The only way the generals could maintain mass training and develop new weapons was to finance private paramilitary units, like the Free Corps, with secret army funds.
Hitler not only began his career as an army agent, but even in the 1930s he was supported by a powerful faction in the army. Over several years, General von Schleicher, who was in charge of a secret informal political department of the army, funneled over ten million marks to Hitler. Why? Many military officers wanted an authoritarian government that could unify the nation. The people needed to be infused with a new spirit of patriotism because powerful interests were planning a war of revenge against the Allies. Naturally there was a division of opinion among the generals as to how much power to give Hitler. Hindenburg originally had strong reservations about appointing a man from a lower-class background, like Hitler, chancellor. However, the aggressive action the Nazis took against Communists was admired by Hindenburg, and his relationship with Hitler rapidly improved.
One day, Hindenburg summoned Hitler when Papen was away from Berlin. Hitler informed the president that Papen was out of town and reminded him of the rule he (Hindenburg) had made, that the chancellor could visit him only when accompanied by the vice-chancellor. "The old gentleman [Hindenburg]," said Hitler, "replied that he wished to see me alone, and that in the future the presence of Papen could be regarded as unnecessary. Within three weeks, he had progressed so far that his attitude towards me became affectionate and paternal. Talking of the elections fixed for the 3rd of March, he said, 'What are we going to do if you fail to get a majority? We shall have the same difficulties all over again.'"

At the beginning of the election campaign, Hitler and Papen persuaded old President von Hindenburg to sign an emergency decree to protect law and order. The decree gave Nazi officials the right to prohibit public meetings. Newspapers could be suppressed if they "incited" civil disobedience or published "false" reports.

Yes, well, while this current American society is one I find distasteful and keep my separation, and my families separation from it, the one you state would not be an option for me, or my family, either (of course, I choose friends of a like mind.)

I'll just be here waiting for a 3rd option, or for things to turn back towards sanity ... the 60's and back look good to me.

Maybe the Point is in the 'Choice' of Words :

On One Hand a 'Swat' -v-The Other a 'Beating' Fist

One seeks Correction and Acceptance of Parental Authority.
-while-
The Other Punishment, Pain and Fear.

Maybe the reasoning of the Parent before the Corporal Punishment is the basis for understanding

Who & What & Where & How & When . . .

What Does the Corporal Punishment Communicate to the Child from the Parent ?

=IF= At one years old you start by 'flicking' your trigger-finger {just one Finger} on the Child's Wrist while getting down at the Child's Face level and Saying "NO !" in a Strong Voice directly in the Child's Face; with with a Stern Facial Expression; and holding up that One Finger in front of their Face and Saying "No" again. Then Your Actions and Message is Clear and Age Appropriate. -follow-up-Then Pick-up the Child and Hold the Child and Talk to the Child {Follow-Up} about what the Child Did Wrong and Why the Action is Bad/Harmful/Un-Safe for them. End the Follow-Up with a Hug and Kiss {Express You Love of Him/Her To The Child}

YOU WANT THE CHILD's ACCEPTANCE OF YOUR PARENTAL AUTHORITY -not- Fear & Hate & Anger.

-if- within the next year of two : When the Child is about to do something wrong/bad/un-safe and they hesitate and look over at you to see 'if' you are watching . . .
and You Look-at them and Hold-Up Your Finger and Say 'No'; and they stop trun around and walk away :
(o: YOU HAVE WON :o) The Child Has Accepted
You Parental Authority and you have a established a Good Foundation to Build you Future Relationship with 'The Child".

NOTE - 'the child' -is- "The Child" -not-an- 'it'*
Think "The Child" or The 'Name' of "The Child"
NEVER Think 'It' ["IT" Thinking Is A Problem : That is the basis of bad parenting and child neglect and abuse.]

* 'it' is an object or thing : "The Child" is neither.

I think we might be in some sort of agreement. If, buried in your text is, "those beating their children are actually making the statement that their children come from such poor genetic stock that they must be beaten to be proper members of society ..." I can see your point. Indeed, most often, I see idiots beating idiots ...

Even if idiots attempt to hide all this, it is a dead give away, you can just tell by the way the children behave ...

I keep hearing that the average cost per inmate, in prison, is ~$40,000 per year. I would think we would be anxious to make the prisons as small as possible ... but, I keep hearing that prisoners are being used as slave labor, paid ~0.25 per hour and do jobs for private industries which contract with the prisons ...

Point is, the whole prison "thing" stinks to high heaven ... and, I also hear that ~1% of our population is locked up in prisons ... add to that the rumor has it that ~30%-50% of the prisoners are in their for "victimless crimes" and it is a real reeking sewer plant of possible corruption and abuses ...

I just don't have the desire or energy to do the research ... but then, that also makes me suspicious these "rumors" just might be true ... as everyone else is too lazy too ...

I beg to differ on music. Music, at least classical music, is a very precise art with many elements of mathematics and science. It is easy to play music, but hard to play it and write it very well. If it were not so, we'd have many more acclaimed maestros and virtuosos than we now have.

BTW, people who are real musicians are not known to be of low IQ.

Nonsense. You obviously have no idea what a REAL radio like a Drake R7

Thank you for loosely reiterating one of my points. You are partly correct.

And I reiterate, music as an art does have strong elements of math and science; in fact, music of quality contains a great deal of mathematical precision and sonic science - and to claim otherwise is disingenuous or uninformed. Further, to claim that musicians of high calibre do not betray a high level of intelligence is a point of misinformation.

And how, may we ask is it "that 210 years ago people were generally a lot smarter than they are now" ? I was always told that most people (worldwide) were mostly illiterate until very recently. And how can we sample a spoken recording of such a time???

Only one place does it say anything remotely applicable:

VIII: Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

We've all seen how much good this amendment does, when bail for many crimes runs in excess of half a million dollars, fines are being issued far in excess of any value involved. Also, cruel and unusual punishment is purely subjective. A SCOTUS decision back in the 90's found that prison overcrowding (in CA, IIRC) may well be cruel, but is certainly not unusual, and so a tort claim by inmates was struck down. If enough people wanted stoning, it would probably pass muster in the current SCOTUS.

Because he says things that people want to hear. People like being talked to on the radio, and there are enough people out there who agree with what he says to make it worthwhile for advertisers to support him.

The last US presidential election was a great dissapointment for many people, and he is a voice for the more moderate ones. John McCain lost the popular vote by a small percentage (it was still a clear loss) because enough voters felt he was too liberal and did not vote in protest.

They want a voice, they want a candidate and they like what Limbaugh has to say. There was even talk of him running for president on the 2008 Republican ticket, and I think he would of done better than McCain.

Like him or not, listen to him or not, agree with him or not, he is going to be the voice of a major influence on the next US presidential election. You can debate whether he creates the opinions or meerly reflects them, but either way there is enough demand for his saying them to keep him on the air.

Well, I can only speak for myself, the wife, the family and friends ... we enjoy the satirical comedy ... and how he acts like he is actually expected to be taken seriously. It is kinda reminiscent of the old Don Rickles routines, the roasts and such ... and, it is obvious there are those who take him seriously ... but I don't think most can miss the political comedy this man represents ... a true sign of our times.

What is a real hoot is to watch him repeat himself thousands of times over days or even weeks, finally have what he has been saying dismissed as absolutely ridiculous, then watch him switch over to the other side, acting as if he has been there all the time. I mean, the total lack of ethics, morals and truth in his insane ramblings is very dark comedy!
The man is an artist at it.

France now is having a Social-Financial problem with the Muslim "2nd Wife Option". Since Marriage in France is defined as 1-Man & 1-Women there is NO Legal "2nd Wife Option" -so- The "2nd Wives" are Not-Married and the "2nd Wives" are Collecting Public Assistance to Support Themselves and Their Many Children. Heard on the Radio that 1-in-6 Muslim Women with Kids in France is On-Public-Support.
Paid for by the Majority Christian Tax Payers of France.

Allah Is Good and Rewards the "2nd Wife Option" in France for Muslims to be fruitful and multiply ~asa~

Aye. These are dark and ignorant times we live in. Common sense is absent in our public servants; They refer to themselves as "leaders," I wouldn't follow them across the street to where they bought me a free beer!

Anyone even remotely mentioned as running in the next election, on any level, local, state, federal, would not get my vote ... I honestly have been unable to vote in the last few elections ... there is simply no one fit which is on the ballot. Amazing, really ...

Actually, since the 1970's, each new president has seen welfare/food-stamps increase ... through republi-crats and demo-cans the course has been unfaltering ... why get so upset now?

The president who replaces obama, be him/her republi-crat or demo-can,

"why get so upset now?" you ask?

Well, it would seem that subtle (or not so subtle) racial bigotry may be the answer to your question.

From reading some of the posts here, it would seem that no matter WHAT Obama says or does, he is automatically wrong.

Heck, one poster even said Obama was a bad president because he didn't get the family dog from a pound...

Fascism is a form of government which centers all power [House, Senate and Judiciary] in a single party [Liberal Fascist Democrats] headed by an absolute dictater [0baMa0 Tse Dung].

Pt.2 http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Dvuxr7v4xzk

"Just as the Left was drawn to the communist killing machines of Lenin, Stalin, Mao, Pol Pot, and Castro, so too it is now attracted to radical Islam."

"The contempt that German Hitlerytes had for "Bolshevism" or "marxist Jews" generally should also not mislead us in assessing the similarity between National Socialism and Communism. Leftist sects are very prone to rivalry, dissension, schism and hatred of one-another. One has only to think of the Bolsheviks versus the Mensheviks, Stalin versus Trotsky, China versus the Soviet Union etc. Similarity does not preclude rivalry. Hitler and Stalin were literally brothers in arms BEFORE they became rivals. That socialist brothers sometimes fall out should not prevent us from noting the brotherhood concerned."

"The fundamental dogma of all brands of socialism and communism is that the market economy or capitalism is a system that hurts the vital interests of the immense majority of people for the sole benefit of a small minority of rugged individualists. It condemns the masses to progressing impoverishment. It brings about misery, slavery, oppression, degradation and exploitation of the working men, while it enriches a class of idle and useless parasites."

"This doctrine was not the work of Karl Marx. It had been developed long before Marx entered the scene. Its most successful propagators were not the Marxian authors, but such men as Carlyle and Ruskin, the British Fabians, the German professors and the American Institutionalists. And it is a very significant fact that the correctness of this dogma was contested only by a few economists who were very soon silenced and barred from access to the universities, the press, the leadership of political parties and, first of all, public office. Public opinion by and large accepted the condemnation of capitalism without any reservation."

"The term 'planning' is mostly used as a synonym for socialism, communism, and authoritarian and totalitarian economic management. Sometimes only the German pattern of socialism-Zwangswirtschaft-is called planning, while the term socialism proper is reserved for the Russian pattern of outright socialization and bureaucratic operation of all plants, shops, and farms. At any rate, planning in this sense means all-around planning by the government and enforcement of these plans by the police power. Planning in this sense means full government control of business. It is the antithesis of free enterprise, private initiative, private ownership of the means of production, market economy, and the price system. Planning and capitalism are utterly incompatible. Within a system of planning production is conducted according to the government's orders, not according to the plans of capitalists and entrepreneurs eager to profit by best filling the wants of the consumers.

"But the term planning is also used in a second sense. Lord Keynes, Sir William Beveridge, Professor Hansen, and many other eminent men assert that they do not want to substitute totalitarian slavery for freedom. They declare that they are planing for a free society. They recommend a third system, which, as they say, is as far from socialism as it is from capitalism, which, as a third solution of the problem of society's economic organization, stands midway between the two other systems, and while retaining the advantages of both, avoids the disadvantages inherent in each.

"These self-styled progressives are certainly mistaken when they pretend that their proposals are new and unheard of. The idea of this third solution is very old indeed, and the French have long since baptized it with a pertinent name; they call it interventionism. Hardly anybody can doubt that history will link the idea of social security, more closely than with the American New Deal and with Sir William Beveridge, with the memory of Bismarck whom our fathers did not precisely describe as a liberal. All the essential ideas of present-day interventionist progressivism were neatly expounded by the supreme brain-trusters of imperial Germany, Professors Schmoller and Wagner, who at the same time urged their Kaiser to invade and to conquer the Americas. Far be it from me to condemn any idea only on account of its not being new. But as the progressives slander all their opponents as old-fashioned, orthodox, and reactionary, it is expedient to observe that it ,vould be more appropriate to speak of the clash of two orthodoxies; the Bismarck orthodoxy versus the Jefferson orthodoxy.

The following is from The World Book Encyclopedia, 1947 edition:
The chief characteristics of Fascism are as follows:

THE CULTIVATION OF IGNORANCE

Fascism, like all forms of government, rests firmly on the sincere consent of a large part of the population... To maintain this consent, the Fascist leadership must cut off the people from any information which might cause them to doubt the complete rightness of the fixed Fascist principles... All forms of communication are carefully censored, so that the public will receive only those facts that the dictators want known... Travel to other countries must be controlled, and freedom of speech and assembly must be rigorously suppressed...

SUPPRESSION OF LABOR AND INDUSTRY

Fascism in Italy and Germany at first won the support of the wealthy classes, both landed and industrial... These people saw in Fascism a protection against the demands of farmers and other workers... Both regimes at first upheld the rights of private property... They subjected the working classes to a rigorous discipline... As soon as they were firmly established, the dictators began to limit profit, impose capital levies, and regulate business in great detail...

Employment Rates under Liberal Fascism
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=9ssIhiD8kKM
.....sound
familiar?.....

THE POLICE STATE

Fascism depends upon the police to crush all opposition or dissent.
Secret police spy on the whole population, and any casual remark against the regime leads to swift and severe punishment... Opposition parties are dissolved. Intellectual, athletic and recreational organizations are usually brought under the control of the Fascist authority... The ruthlessness of the police gradually becomes less noticeable... This is because within a year or so after a Fascist government takes power, vigorous opponents of the regime have either left the country, been killed or jailed...

(Both Fascist and Communist leaders make use of the police state...
Every absolute government has used the police state to some degree...
It was highly developed among the ancient Assyrians...)

EXTREME NATIONALISM

Fascism is highly nationalistic... It tries to identify its principles with the country, so that disagreement will look like treason... Some other country, or some group within the country, is chosen to serve as the "enemy" and made to appear as the cause of all evils or misfortunes... For example, the Nazis in Germany represented their movement first as a crusade against the Jews, then as a fight against Communism and later as a struggle against the "attacks" from whatever neighboring country they wished to subdue or occupy... Extreme nationalism often becomes a kind of racial fanaticism... Sometimes it combines racial and religious bigotry...

MILITARISM

Fascism maintains among the people a permanently warlike frame of mind... Every citizen feels that he is mobilized against enemies of the regime from within, and against possible foreign foes... The dictator usually comes to power during a period of economic crisis or depression... He relieves the depression partly by employing many people in the making of armaments... To justify this procedure, he must convince the people that the country is threatened, and must point toward some of the enemies against whom the armaments may be needed...

No, he was commenting that Obama promised that he was going to get his dog from the pound, and then bought a purebred from an exclusive breeder.

Just another broken promise.

It's real easy to throw down the race card in dismissing critics of this President. But it's a cheap shot.

The issue with this guy is the broken promises. Starting with the campaign platform that promised a ban on hiring lobbyists into his administration (that one didn't last through the transition), the promise to run the most transparent administration in history (while all the negotiations on the Health Care Bill were done in secret behind closed doors), and the promise that all bills would be posted to the internet for 72 hours prior to a vote (he has yet to meet that one).

None of those have anything to do with race, Joe.

They have to do with his making promises that would be very easy to keep. And all of them having been broken at the first opportunity.

It's not race, Joe. It's his behaviour.

In other words, it's not the race. It's the man.

As I have said, through republi-crats and demo-cans, the plan of the elite NWO marches on ... it has, at least, since the early 1970's ...

Sounds like we have reached some ground we can agree on.

Anyway, I can attest to something me, the wife and everyone around me has commented on. The prison system seems to be able to take someone who has "made a mistake" and turn him into a big-bad-dangerous-criminal in no time ... into someone who you DON'T WANT AS A NEIGHBOR!

From just our observations, prisons look more like "Criminal Technical Training Schools" than anything else ... my wifes nephew and a few of the kids of our friends "made a mistake" and came out full blown criminals and drug addicted ... what is up with that, anyway?

Well, American idol, music was chosen by the public. Small bands started out playing small gigs, bars, etc. If they were good (what the people actually wanted) they "made it."

Now that music is just a business, only crap is turned out and the real talent is never recognized ... but then, that same thing goes with a lot of "stuff" ...

This did not happen in a vacuum. First they gut the schools by not teaching civics and government. Then they raise a couple generations of functionally illiterate TV zombies. Then they use the TV to scare them into doing the corporations' will.

Critical thinking and healthy skepticism are now treated as abnormality and met with ridicule and violence. Sensitive people are portrayed as weak. No time to think things through, we are under siege by Muslims and homosexuals.

A little late for that. It may have worked back when people actually listened to the radio.

This is a great example of corporations making law, changing politics, and getting rich.

Follow the "3 strikes" laws, drugs laws, and the development of private
"for-profit" prisons.

In the 18th century Americans were more rational and focused than they are today. Their vocabularies were much bigger and they could follow an argument to a logical conclusion.

TV, the internet, etc., may fill up our heads with more facts, etc., but they have done nothing but made us functionally way dumber. I like to think of the mass media as a voluntary electronic lobotomy.

Read "the Age of Reason" by Thomas Paine (the atheist who invented the USA). It is one of the most beautiful things ever written. Nothing today compares.

No. Fascism is when business creates a subservient government that serves business first, then the people. This requires that the people are groomed to be susceptible of manipulative schemes like religious fervor and patriotic wars. There is a great deal of symbolism, and for some weird reason, a lot of homoerotic back story.

Sounds plausible. Having said that, there are plenty of studues that have provided good statistical correlation between musical skill and high levels of math and science comprehension and ability. Does this mean that the two skillsets are intercheangeable? Almost certainly not - but it suggests that the brain recognizes the similarities and overlaps.

Alberts Einstein and Schweitzer were both fine musicians. Schweitzer was a genius on the organ.

I detected only truth and sincerity.

Many of us on the Far Right have special rooms wallpapered with Wolfowitz, Kristol, Rove and Cheney posters. They add that 'special' feeling to the months or years long bondage experience.

My personal favourite times include wearing a latex George W. mask while gazing at my domineering, ever-so-in-control splendour in the ceiling mirrors.

Strangely, though...my special house guest from Holland Michigan doesn't seem nearly as proactive as his adverts led me to believe he would be. I'll have to check his collar for chafing...

For now, one of the big attractions of the HD2 sub-channel is the almost total lack of commercials. As HD receiver penetration continues to increase there will be attempts to monetize it, which will reduce the attraction of it. The far better audio quality of HD, and the better content, are advantages to be sure, but the lack of commercials is one of the biggest attractions.

One thing I'd like to see is higher bit rates on HD2 and lower bit rates on HD1.

HD radio audio quality is better than what? AM radio?

It would be better to use the bandwidth for the second channel only to give it enough bits to sound properly.

Well, I hate to put too fine a point on it...as I don't remember the specific details (because at the time, I thought the dog deal was pretty much a non-issue).

When you say "promise", to whom? Under what conditions? Did he swear to it in front of a Supreme Court Justice on George Washington's bible?

I don't know if you are a parent or not, but sometimes parents do try and please their kids. Maybe there was nothing at the pound that the kids liked. Bottom line...there could be fifty different reasons why they didn't end up getting it from the pound.

> It's real easy to throw down the race card in dismissing critics of this

I would respectfully beg to differ. It is abundantly, I say ABUNDANTLY clear, that racism, however subtle, IS a factor. There are some (many?) on this NG for whom Obama can NEVER be right, no matter which side of the fence he is on.

Sorry, but that happens time and again on this NG.

However, I do agree with you that "the man" is also -part- of the equation.

Gee, a politician (of EITHER party) that lies. Who'd a thunk it? I'm shocked...shocked, I say.

P.S.
The last presidential lies cost us TWO bogus wars, a trillion dollars, thousands of US kids dead, more thousands horribly mutilated and tens of thousands of dead innocent civilians.

If I had a choice, I'll go with the "lie" about the dog. :-(

He brings in ratings and ad revenue. Rush uses the "in your face" routine

Liberty Net: September 11, 2010

http://3950.net/2010/09/liberty-net-september-11-2010/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

THE ISLAMIFICATION of America and Europe was a major subject on the Liberty Net on the ninth anniversary of the 9/11 attacks. There was quite a bit of disagreement and debate on the subject, which made for very interesting listening.

Hereï¿½s a small selection of of the subjects brought up this week on amateur radioï¿½s longest-running discussion net:

ï¿½ Clearly Americans and Christians are being agitated to feel anger towards Islam, and the converse is also true. What we should ask ourselves is this: What third group, also Middle Eastern-derived , benefits from all this conflict? (52 minutes)

ï¿½ If burning a Koran is ï¿½protected speechï¿½ expressing outrage at the imposition of alien values, would burning a Talmud also be protected ï¿½ and appropriate? (53 minutes)

ï¿½ When the media masters show us images of American ï¿½rednecksï¿½ burning a Koran, or Muslim ï¿½jihadistsï¿½ burning an American flag, they tap into a deep, instinctual, primitive part of the brain that makes us want to lash out in anger at our ï¿½opponent.ï¿½ Perhaps the ethnically-distinct media billionaires are the real Opponent. (59 minutes)

ï¿½ Itï¿½s a lie that the Iraq War is over. Renaming the units and the mission to benign-sounding names doesnï¿½t change anything. Itï¿½s re-branding, nothing more. And the purpose is to ï¿½playï¿½ us, so that weï¿½ll accept the next war for Israel that the criminals want to start. (1 hour 3 minutes)

ï¿½ Islam and Sharia Law may be extremely undesirable for our civilization generally, but maybe they have something when it comes to outlawing usury ï¿½ which they define strictly enough to totally eliminate the creation of money out of thin air by the banking system. (1 hour 10 minutes)

ï¿½ Our current money system is untenable and leads to periodic collapses. It is based on the concepts of compound interest and fractional reserve lending. A simple thought experiment will show its unsustainability: Imagine you lend one dollar at five per cent. interest in the year 1, and pass the investment on from generation to generation until today. Use your calculator to figure the value of 1.05 raised to the 2,010th power and you will see that you now are owed more money than has ever existed on the entire planet. (1 hour 14 minutes)

ï¿½ The average Muslim family has about seven children ï¿½ while the average White American family has about 1.3 children, far below replacement level. If you extrapolate the numbers just two generations ahead, the Muslims in the US will multiply their numbers to hundreds of millions ï¿½ while we decrease ours. But we will have become a Muslim caliphate long before that. (1 hour 19 minutes)

ï¿½ America has a bizarre and schizophrenic policy on immigration. Case in point: Companies ï¿½ who are, on the one hand, required to hire only legal residents ï¿½ can now be fined, and possibly sued by the ï¿½Justice Department,ï¿½ for merely asking potential workers to allow inspection of their green cards. The regime has started calling such requests ï¿½document abuse discrimination,ï¿½ and they have seriously threatened lawsuits over it. The only sane solution is to base citizenship and immigration strictly on race. (1 hour 59 minutes)

ï¿½ As the election approaches, some multiracialists in Congress have now declared that we must stop using the phrase ï¿½throw the bums outï¿½ because ï¿½ they claim ï¿½ itï¿½s code language for ï¿½throw the Blacks out.ï¿½ (2 hours 3 minutes)

ï¿½ Black Congresswoman Sheila Jackson Lee has complained that all the names of hurricanes are ï¿½White namesï¿½ and that ï¿½Black namesï¿½ ought to be included. (2 hours 7 minutes)

Remember that you can receive the Liberty Net on the nearest open frequency to 3950 kHz every Saturday night at 10PM Eastern Time. You can also listen live on the Internet via N2SAG (who also includes a lively chat room during Net hours) or N2IRJ (whose delayed feeds also run throughout the week), or listen at your leisure via the mp3 files posted here at http://3950.net every week.

Once again, thanks to W1WCR and all participants for making this extraordinary net possible.

I don't understand you, Dave.

You say you're against power concentration -- but you're absolutely in _love_ with the idea of taking virtually all of the money of the wealthy dynasts and _combining_ it into one super-concentrated nexus of power.

As Lee Iacocca said to the Mrs, "Nice dodge."

You brought up the dog. I didn't say it was an important issue.
But it was another broken promise. One of dozens. That was the point.

That's true. But to comment on it isn't racism. To criticize him for it isn't racism.

Someone in his position doesn't make a promise on such an issue, except to appease a political constituency. That's not racial, either. In other words, it was another political promise broken.

Unimportant as it is.

But you brought it up.

That's an interesting leap.

So, there's no way race can't be involved?

The fact that there are those for whom G.W. Bush can NEVER be right no matter which side he is on? So that's got a racial component?

The fact that there are those for whom Bill Clinton can NEVER be right no matter which side he is on? That's racial?

But criticism of Obama must have a racial factor.

Where have I heard that before. I'd say that's a pretty racist remark on its face.

You bring up Bush. Yes, he broke promises. He was excoriated for it. I don't recall Jesse Jackson saying that the 'no new taxes' blunder, AND it's subsequent criticisms, were racially motivated.

Yet, criticism of Obama for his blunders must be rooted in race?

That's bullshit.

Bill Clinton ran on a platform of lowering taxes for the middle class. And before the first month was up, broke that promise.
Ironically, also blaming a Bush.

He, was crucified for it.

Bill Clinton lied his ass off before the nation, before the Congress, before his wife. He committed perjury on the witness stand. He also promised transparency. And he took his cornerstone issues behind closed doors.

And he was savaged for them.

I don't recall a single comment implying racial motivations in any of these criticisms.

Not one.

And Bush 43? Where to start.

I don't recall anyone suggesting that any criticisms of Bush were motivated by race. But many of them did accuse HIM of racial motivation.

The hard truth is that politicians lie. They make promises with the intention of breaking them. And make backroom deals. They sell their influence. I'm in Illinois. Politicians rank below gang members, career rapists and lawyers. But nowhere is ANY criticism refuted with accusations of racism.

These career criminals are criticized for their actions. Their ethics. Their values. For who they are. And often for who they are not.

Race isn't even on the radar.

"Racism" is the easiest card to throw in this culture today. IT's a hot button issue.

And it's a cheap shot.

You want to defend Obama? Go for it. You'll have no end of ready participants to such a discussion. A discussion, by the way, that may be productive. Might actually convince some people. Will certainly clarify thinking. And crystalize beliefs.

Try discussing the issues. You may find that you're in agreement with many of us. You may find that many are in agreement with you.

But as soon as you get backed into a corner by a fact, throw the race card. Please. Show us how evolved you are.

Both. But right now - 1900UT they are on 14280kHz voice. Does not sound promising. About 10 people talking at once and a couple dead carriers on the frequency.

I know one thing, it is truly amazing. It in non-intuitive, brilliant in its' simplicity and seems to have some relationship to the human psyche which keeps the victim from seeing the victimization. And, so far, has seemed to work very well for them ... for decades.

It is the simple "political-football-deception." You simply give them two choices (two teams, parties, etc.), and then stock the teams with treasonous, unethical, sociopathic liars who will do anything or say anything in support of their masters and, you have a game!

You can even do this right out in the open. If anyone, or any group, complains and tries to point out patterns and the end results, going on for decades, which they have even been caught at before (false-flag operations, for example) and they simply need to yell "conspiracy nut-job" and the blanket which hides their treasonous crimes falls to cloak their criminal actions ... simply amazing to set back and watch, knowing it will be impossible to awaken those caught in the lotus blossom dreams ...

I don't know about that, but those with the gold are going to have to pay the bills, fix the roads, maintain public services, power, water, medical, parks, programs, etc., etc., etc.

We have simply reached the point where taxing the poor has the same result of attempting to extract blood from the fabled turnip ... but that doesn't mean they still won't keep trying ...

The war was just about over when they dropped the bombs. They needed a human population to use as Guinea Pigs. The only atrocity bigger in the War was the fire bombing of German cities.

As for Einstein, it would appear he was a thief.

It had nothing to do with him. He was a plagiarist.

==========
The most glaring evidence against Einstein concerns “his” most famous equation. One website notes “The equation E=mc^2, which has been forever linked to Einstein & his Theory of Relativity was not originally published by Einstein.

According to Umberto Bartocci, a professor at the University of Perugia and a historian of mathematics, this famous equation was first published by Olinto De Pretto …two years prior to Einstein’s publishing of the equation.

In 1903 De Pretto published his equation in the scientific magazine Atte and in 1904 it was republished by the Royal Science Institute of Veneto. Einstein’s research was not published until 1905… Einstein was well versed in Italian and even lived in Northern Italy for a brief time.”

If you read the other links you provide, E=mc^2 shows up quite a bit earlier than 1900.

If you enjoy the math, look up the works of Hendrik Lorentz, who developed the transformation equations used by Einstein to describe space-time.

I love when fools attempt to rewrite history ... japan was not so anxious to surrender with the first dropping of a super weapon, wiping out a whole city ... it took the second ... that is not even close for horseshoes ... but then, one more American life wasted, to not having dropped the bomb would have been far too many for me.

That is just dealing with the matter way too lightly ... I am damn proud of what we done to win the war. That is a time when the government was a government to be damn proud of. The men who fought that war were men to be damn proud of. American ingenuity spent developing the bomb is/was something to be damn proud of.

Bomb Pearl Harbor and that is exactly what it will take to settle the score ... the fools I share America with, today, I am too often ashamed of.

It really doesn't sound that much like it is all that well thought out and orchestrated, his ranting and defective logic ... he sounds more like a crack horror ranting in a back alley, than anything else.

However, I think he is only doing it for the money ... look what a horror will do for a hit of crack and a $5.00 bill ... at $50,000,000, just think of him as a VERY EXPENSIVE crack horror!

Reportedly the MIL-INTEL that Prez Truman was given to help him make the Decision to Drop the A/H Bombs or not was that :
1 - Using the Bombs would Break the Will of the Japanese to continue to Fight and Defend their Mainland like they did Okinawa.
2 - Not using the Bombs would mean that the USA and the Allies would have to Fight the Japanese both Military and Civilian in their Home Island with the potential cost of a Million or more Japanese Civilian Lives along with a 100K or more US MIL causalities.

Prez Truman decided to Drop the Bombs and yes doing so did save a million or more Deaths on both sides.

Note - MacArthur's Post-War Occupation Intelligence discover from the Japanese Military that the US's prior estimates were low and the Japanese were prepared ready to Fight more and longer; and the causalities may have been doubled into the Millions.
The Japanese thinking was that the Japanese could Fight the US & Allies to a stalemate on their Home Islands and Win a Cease Fire and an Armistice versus a Complete Surrender and Occupation by the US & Allies. -wrt- N&S Korea later in 1953

Isaac Newton supposedly said that energy and matter have an equivalence and are interchangeable. That should be a few hundred years before 1900. Then there are the ancient Greeks and their atoms...where does it end?

When LEDs come into mass production, to the extent of CFLs, that will fix the cost effectiveness ... a good LED consumes 50% the power of a CFL, or better ... this efficiency is not as advanced as it will be in the future.

I have had 20+ LED Lights for 120-VAC
with the Standard USA E27-Base.

Only 4~6 have lasted more than a Year with out going blank or loosing half the individual LEDs in the Bulbs.

Some of these LEDs cost in the $20~$30

IMHO - LEDs are still : Not Ready for Prime Time.

A more mellow 'Yellowish' light rather than the harsh white. I still have a Rough 100 Watt Power Light Output Equivalents :

Old Incandescent Bulb Watts = 100 {Cost $1}

New CFL Bulb Watts = 26 : {Cost $4 ~ 4X}
INC to CFL 4:1

LED Bulb Claim Watts = 11 : {Cost $25 ~ 25X}
INC to LED 9:1
CFL to LED 2:1

IMHO - Currently The Best Bang For The Buck :
Is The CFL Bulb :
* Relative Initial Cost to Buy the 1st Bulb
* Longer Service Life and fewer Bulb Replacements
* * CFL Life = 13 INCs ~ 1-CFL = 1/3 of INC Total
* Fewer Watts Used per Hour/Month/Year/LC Lower Energy Cost over it Total Life-Cycle

These Spiral {Mushroom} CFLs rated at 120 Watts Light Output {=Lumens} and use

Take a Look at the new GE Reveal CFLs

GE 'Reveal' CFL Bulbs -promise- Clean, Beautiful Light http://www.gelighting.com/na/home_lighting/products/reveal_cfl.htm
-but- they are NOT Daylight {Bright}
-and- they are NOT Full Spectrum {White}
-sort-of-like- the pale mellow yellow of old Incandescent Bulbs

FWIW - GE Reveal CFLs sell for ~$10 for a pair at Wal*Mart

So, we need to outlaw incandescents because you say so?
Would it not be wise to err on the side of free choice?

LIBERAL FASCISTS can't, won't stop with just incandescent bulbs...

Assistant Secretary of Energy Cathy [www.masterbationtoday.com] Zoi said Thursday that the U.S. Department of Energy has a “mandate” to issue regulations to determine what household appliances are available to Americans in the future.

Speaking at the inaugural meeting of the recently reestablished Secretary of Energy Advisory Board (SEAB), Zoi pointed to four tactics the Obama administration intended use to advance the “deployment of clean energy.” The first three were government subsidies for private-sector green energy projects, special tax incentives for green energy projects and low-interest government-backed loans for green energy projects.

“The fourth one, which the secretary and I love,” said Zoi, “is where we have a mandate. Where we can actually just issue regulations and do market transformation.”

Before becoming President Barack Obama’s assistant secretary of energy for energy efficiency and renewable energy, Zoi served as environmental adviser to President Bill Clinton and the founding CEO of former Vice President Al Gore’s Alliance for Climate Protection.

Zoi said that stricter federal energy efficiency standards will “drive innovation” and are “cost effective.”

“As the secretary [Chu] says, ‘We’re going to MAKE [by Liberal Fascist force] people save money for themselves,’” Zoi said. “They haven’t dumped the dollar bills on the ground yet.”

(i) You have cited past postings by myself in a thread that tore both you and the concept apart. (Which you ignored/didn't understand.)

(ii) I posted a reference and synopsis to the Coupland article, from which Goldberg derived the term. (Included in one of the cited postings.)

(iii) Coupland has since stated that Goldberg didn't understand his

(iv) Jonah Goldberg is a slipshod third rate writer. (I will not

(v) No reputable academic journal (on both sides of the Atlantic) has bothered to review his book.

(vi) You appear to be as thick as pig sh*t.

The Liberty Net is rarely on 3950 any more because it's usually busy before net time. It's usually between 3950 and 3980. You have to tune around.

Just make sure they are manufactured here and not in the Peoples Republic. Last time I checked they still used a red banner. Guess some people never had the 'privilege' of living under a complete

There seems to be a surge in LED usage lately, mostly in cars and traffic lights. I do like LEDs. They literally stay cool. But expensive,for now.

I'll buy that - I think LEDs will be ubiquitous in the future, and will be able to serve almost every need.

I bought some LED spotlights for our back path. Run on three "D" cells, IR activated by motion sensor. The first time I turned one on, it near blinded me.. it throws a light path for well over 100'... Batteries are supposed to last around 2 years.

My guess is in France they don't care. They have no law against making illegitimate kids. Old European traditions are disappearing really

Funny, but I would say the earth is warming. Indeed, from what I have read, most, if not all, planets in our system are detectably warmer--I don't think we can be blamed for all that. If the images I have seen on google earth are not manipulated, the polar caps are losing mass due to melting.

The only question is, how much is due to our actions ... if you light a match in an auditorium, you have warmed that auditorium, even though it would, probably, defy us to be able to measure such a small increase in overall warmth, so obviously we have warmed the planet, some ... if this is something to worry about or not is what any concern hinges on. I'd wait before deciding one way or another ... and, why is the warming necessarily bad? There are a lot more questions to be answered before sane men would make any drastic judgment or take drastic action.

Either way, carbon taxes are a scam which does nothing but put money in the greedy and corrupt pockets.

JS

I have a series of 5 watt cree leds on a large aquarium. The plants grow like crazy. 60 watts of leds seem noticeably brighter than the 160 watts of fluorescent they replaced ... the leds have already come down in cost since I purchased mine over a year ago ... the focus of the leds allow the light to used more efficiently, with the fluorescent, a lot of light was lost out the sides and ends ...

1.5 million is an estimate only. We may never know the real number of civilian deaths. Japanese are very good in deception. especially when they are at war.

Uncle Joe was also a great deceiver/ actor. His own people still fear/hate/despise him. Even in his hometown his statue was removed not so long ago. Had to be done at night,though.

Very average lunatic. We have thousands like him roaming the streets

Yepp, been there too. I had enough physics in college to sink a ship, relativity amongst it. I actually enjoyed modern physics quite a lot, and it made sense - which still amazes me today!

Perhaps - the leap from matter (mass) to energy equivalence is a pretty substantial one - the burning of matter in a chemical reaction to yield energy from molecular bonds is well known since dirt, but thinking about how matter itself may be converted lock, stock, and barrel to energy without a trace of mass left is a BIG intuitive jump, especially when the structure of an atom and the relationship between energy and mass was so poorly understood. There were some pretty amazing minds pondering these questions...

I think that the people of the time who were educated, without knowing nearly so much as is known now, were far more philosophically and classically trained as a rule. Reason and logic were held in high esteem, unlike these days when instinct seems to be making a comeback and narrowly-focused hedonism is more prevalent.

However, you are right - the ranks of the illiterate and substantially uneducated were legion - and for most vocations of the time it probably was not critical anyway. Formal education for farming, blacksmithing, coopering, tailoring and etc. was apprenticeship.

My only concern with LEDs, and this is partly selfish, is that their spectra are often very broadband and have strong spikes in the blue-green region. For an amateur astronomer trying to avoid light pollution, this presents some problems - astro objects often glow in this region of the spectrum; human vision in the dark is best in this region of the spectrum; and eyepiece filters used to control light pollution usually pass wavelengths in this region of the spectrum. Consequently, LEDs are in direct conflict with good views of deep-sky objects, and the glow from these devices are nearly impossible to overcome using filtration. This was not the case with most other light devices, excepting things like brilliant blue halogen lamps. Incandescent light, in particular, is easy to filter, as are many ordinary fluorescent wavelengths.

Most people lived off the land they resided on until (very roughly) 100-150 years ago. Village or parochial (in rural areas) education could not hold a candle to what the contemporary city/town kids have learned back in those days. Incidentally,one of the reasons why the War between the States ended decisively was the superiority of science,technology and education. And railroads. And telegraph. And schools There is no substitute for knowledge.

- There seems to be a surge in LED usage lately, mostly in cars and
- traffic lights. I do like LEDs. They literally stay cool. But
- expensive,for now.

Saves in the size of the Copper Wiring and Reduces the Weight of the Car/Truck : Because the LED uses less Current for the same 12 VDC then the equivalent Lumen's Rated Incandescent Bulbs.

Well of course it made sense. It describes the foundations of the universe.

I particularly enjoyed seeing the evolution of thinking along a given line. Watching the evolution of thinking, and the math, from Newton to Einstein. for instance, is like watching your kids grow up.

Hmmm...we the people don't like taxes?

I'll bet they -do- like having EMS come when a family member is ill or having the fire department show up when their house is on fire or driving on a paved road, not a dirt two track.

Maybe the people that dislike taxes think all these services are free.

ZCZC AP37
QST de W1AW
Propagation Forecast Bulletin 37 ARLP037
>From Tad Cook, K7RA
Seattle, WA September 17, 2010
To all radio amateurs

SB PROP ARL ARLP037
ARLP037 Propagation de K7RA

Average daily sunspot numbers this week dropped nearly 23 points to 15.6, and geomagnetic indices were quiet. The average daily solar flux was 78.1, but the latest prediction from USAF and NOAA is for rising solar flux values. The September 17-23 projection has solar flux values at 85, 85, 86, 86, 86, 87, and 88, which is well above last week's average. Solar flux hasn't been to 88 or higher since August 7 (90.5), and before that July 21 (89.1).

The same forecast shows planetary A index for the same period at 8, 5, 5, 5, 18, 18 and 15, which indicates rising geomagnetic activity along with the increased solar activity. Geophysical Institute Prague predicts quiet to unsettled conditions September 17, quiet September 18-19, quiet to unsettled September 20, and unsettled conditions September 21-23.

The Autumnal Equinox occurs Wednesday, September 22 at 11:09 PM EDT, which is 0309 UTC on September 23. With the northern and southern hemispheres bathed in equal amounts of light, expect better worldwide HF propagation, although solar activity continues at a low level which does not support an MUF into the higher frequencies over most paths.

By the way, the bulletin didn't mention this at the beginning of September, but the monthly averages of daily sunspot numbers have risen the past few months. For June, July and August the average daily sunspot numbers for each month were 18, 23.1 and 28.2, and so far in September the average for the first 16 days is 29.6.

Last Saturday, September 11, AC7SB, W7RDP and WE7X went to the Suntop forest fire lookout station in the Cascade Mountains of Washington State. The location is 47.041 deg N, 121.5965 deg W, While there they used a telescope and filter to view an emerging sunspot, W7RDP and WE7X operated the ARRL VHF Contest, and AC7SB worked 40 meter CW using a tape-measure dipole. You can see a photo album of their adventure at, http://tinyurl.com/33z5ty3.

Scott Bidstrup, TI3/W7RI in Costa Rica sent an article about Tsunami waves disrupting the ionosphere. Read it at, http://snipurl.com/13z1o4.

Mike Downing, KC0Y of Broomfield, Colorado is getting back on 6 meters after many years, and wonders how things have changed regarding TVI? He mentioned that most people are using cable TV and the broadcasters have left Channel 2, which had a lot of the problems in the past. According to what I've heard, the situation is much better than it was decades ago, for the reasons that Mike mentioned.

More and more U.S.States are going back to dirt/gravel roads, because they are cheaper to maintain.

I remember dirt roads,,, QUICK!, roll the windows up! That was before auto airconditioning came along, for most cars.That gravel is real good for cracking windshields too, and the mud, when it rains.Those flat plate windshields would blind you too, when the Sun catches them just right.I always liked it when a piece of gravel would get in a hubcap.

Ain't no mud on Batman's cape, he can run faster than a spotted ape,,,,,,

- I have had 20+ LED Lights for 120-VAC
- with the Standard USA E27-Base.
- Only 4~6 have lasted more than a Year
- with out going blank or loosing half the
- individual LEDs in the Bulbs.
- Some of these LEDs cost in the $20~$30
- IMHO - LEDs are still : Not Ready for Prime Time.

But then again I have had some real good success with some LEDs : Have 4 Outside Yellow LED Bug & Security Lites for the Detached Garage that are now 7 Years Old and run Nightly from D2D.
-use-only- 2 Watts Each -v- 13W

Recently bought a few LED Nite-Lite Bulbs that actually are as Bright as a 7 Watt Incandescent Light Bulb. -use-only- 2 Watts Each
-source- SuperBrightLEDs.Com
Model # E-12 WHP3
These were the first that were not too 'dim' to actually use as a replacement for the older 7 Watt Incandescent Nite-Lite Bulbs
-note- the older 4 Watt Nite-Lite Incandescent Bulbs were not 'bright' enough either.

- These Mushroom CFLs rated at 120 Watts Light
- http://i00.i.aliimg.com/photo/v0/289159982/Mushroom_anion_CFL.jpg
- Output {=Lumens} and use only 30 Watts of Power
- are Good for Reading Lights {Daylight} and Shine
- http://cgi.ebay.com/370294601763
- Well in most places a 100 Watt Incandescent Bulb
- was used before.http://www.amazon.com/dp/B001A0GFCG/

Also have some other Outside Cold Cathode CFLs [CCFLs or C2FLs] that are now 3 Years Old and run Nightly from D2D {Yellow Colored used as Bug & Porch Lites} -use-only- 8 Watts Each -v-13W

There is little doubt the climate is changing, and most importantly at a reckless rate of speed unparalleled compared to any rates able to be determined from the geologic record. The part some people now have trouble with is: Humans are causing it, and : something should be done to slow it.

It all comes down to short-term costs/profits vs. long-term well-being of the planet and our descendants. A good fortune at the expense of others is a terrible thing to sacrifice for their benefit.

Well, a couple of examples, drugs and guns. The Constitution expressly prohibits the feds from sticking their noses in gun control. Yet, under instate commerce, they have tighter control over guns than someone with the runs over their cheeks, unconstitutional, unlawful, and treasonous--to say the least!

Drugs are not even mentioned in the Constitution. Indeed, there is good evidence that the forefathers wore hemp clothing, wrote the drafts of the Constitution on hemp paper and may have smoked hemp, along with the alcohol they drank, while constructing the Constitution ... yet they have their foul hands involved in drugs ...

I would end all this and more ...

He hates America? Oh come on, you don't REALLY believe that, do you?
I'm no great fan of Limbaugh (he's TOO LIBERAL for my tastes), but I believe his opinions are honest and heart-felt, reflecting his love for the country and his desire to alert us about the national suicide that liberalism and Obama et al are leading us to. Sure, you may disagree, but to say he HATES America is ridiculous. I mean, considering all your raving leftist rants in here, I could just as easily conclude that YOU hate America.

I just think you're jealous of successful rich people like Limbaugh, so you constantly rage against the "machine" as your jealousy builds.

There is little doubt the climate is changing, and most importantly at a reckless rate of speed unparalleled compared to any rates able to be determined from the geologic record. The part some people now have trouble with is: Humans are causing it, and : something should be done to slow it.

It all comes down to short-term costs/profits vs. long-term well-being of the planet and our descendants. A good fortune at the expense of others is a terrible thing to sacrifice for their benefit.

I think one reason many people have a problem with the fact that humans are causing climate change is that humans tend to not think past their own tribal groups, whether that be household, city, state or even country (the US has just 5% of the Earth's population). Fact is, there are 6,000,000,000 of us, and growing rapidly (we were only 3,000,000,000 less than 50 years ago!). That many resource users can't help but affect their environment.

I don't even think that corporations ("limited liability" artificial persons) should exist.

No, Dave, it does not.

That's a fundamental error.

And the "voting" charade is has little to do with it. No more so than the corporations "represent the people" because people "vote with their dollars."

The corporations hate the government. The government represents the people. Limbaugh represents the corporation viewpoint. He speaks what the corporations pay him to say. Limbaugh hates America as manifested in the government which represents the people.

He has minions and the are called "dittoheads".

I favor your opinion. Corporate protections should be VERY LIMITED in scope, purpose and should always be watched with a keen eye, as to their machinations. Any hostile intent towards the consumer or public should be brought to litigation swiftly and sternly.

Rabid left-wing liberals like John Stewart, Keith Olbermann and Rachel Maddow also have broadcast (TV) shows. So then they must also represent the corporation viewpoint and speak what the corporations pay them to say. They also have minions and they are called "fans".
Are you saying that only right-wingers are not allowed to have minions? If so, that's typical leftist elitism, condescension and hypocrisy.

I have heard that it answered the age old question, finally! That question being, "How many fairies can dance the head of a pin?" Who would have thought, you can just take the measured heat gain, from the head of the pin, and using the known heat gain from a single fairy find the correct number?

- Like RHF I haven't heard AFN Pearl Harbour
- for the last many months =
- maybe they are off air?

At one point a year or two ago : I was hearing Chinese {Jammers?} on AFN Pearl Harbor's 6350 kHz side Freqs.

Since AFN Pearl Harbor is only Transmitting at 3 KW using USB with an OD Antenna; a Chinese Transmitter at 50~100 KW would make it a difficult listen.

It's not a soup. Think French Fries with gravy and cheese curds mixed in. The cheese looks like cottage cheese bits. Tastes good if you like dead meat gravy.

Wiki is wrong about the date of invention. It started during the French / English wars during the time of Montcalm and Wolfe.

Nowadays, people are so polarized and so severely misunderstand what fascism is that they are likely to use the word for practically anything with which they sorely disagree.

Unless we are talking about institutionalized bias against specific groups of people, then real fascism is not present, although would-be fascists can be everywhere.

Most gay activists are fighting AGAINST institutionalized fascism. The people RHF cites as having been on TV and in your face may be obnoxious, weird and downright offensive (depending on your POV), and a whole bunch of other things too, but "fascists" is not likely one of them.

Ah, but there is the rub. Your claim is in error.

Mankind, and the accumulated energy use of almost 7,000,000,000 large and greedy mammals, is not the flyspeck you postulate. Never before in earth's history has a single cumulative force been so pervasive and so potent. It took Nature working 24/7/365 for a half billion years to sequester the carbon dioxide that humans are releasing in about one millionth that amount of time. Nothing like this has ever happened, not by the combined effects of volcanoes, hurricanes or erosion. Ever. At least it's welcomed by me :-)

Since I moved here a long time ago, 40m has been a really bad ham band. In the US/Canada, etc, it goes from 7.000 to 7.250 mHz, with 7.000 to 7.150 resticted to CW only in the US.

Here it was only 7.000 to 7.100 for everything. 7.100 up was a SWBC band loaded with s-meter pinning SWBC stations. While it was common for hams to work split frequency operation, for example listening to US hams on 7.175 mHz and responding on 7.075, it was almost impossible as the SWBC stations were every 5kHz apart from 7.100 on up. You would need one heck of a receiver to hear between them.

If propigation was good, I would hear three or four stations on the same frequency. If propigation was bad, I'd hear nothing, not SWBC, not hams.

7.100 to 7.200 was approved as a ham band a few years ago, and the SWBC stations were to vacate it, eventually.

Last night, I was listening around midnight local time (2200Z) and found 7.100 to 7.200 with only one SWBC station (7.105) and loaded with hams.

BpnJ,

What I responded to was the words used by "JS"
- - - "Screaming Queen" homosexual - - -

That is what those Groups '"DID" to get on TV to bring Public Attention to "Their Cause".

Note - Which part of "Activists on behalf of LGBT Rights" did you miss ? {Their Cause}

Substitute "Racist" for 'Fascist' in what you wrote and it still reads the same.

Yes "would-be fascists can be everywhere" including in Liberal Groups and the Democrat Party of the USA.
{An Real Inconvenient Truth}

Nowadays, people understand what Fascism IS {has

That is the full 180 degrees back-arse-wards. They are a small minority who wish to impose their will and the acceptance of their perversions on the majority. They attempt to use the courts as a weapon against any who find them disgusting. They sue over anything, including the right to be openly in neighborhoods practicing their perversions where people are attempting to raise families with real morals and values. The demand that marriage be destroyed in order to give them "equal rights." They demand that the perversion of homosexuality be taught in the schools as an "alternate lifestyle." They have forced the schools into brainwashing the straight students into tolerance and acceptance of these vile perversions.

The means which they will stoop to, to cause "acceptance" of them and that their wants and desires be fulfilled has no bounds ...

NO! Those fools are truly fascist in intent and actions.

Can't disagree with you there.

Though I'd add that when nations turn into evil empires by becoming multiracial and multicultural, they lose their core beliefs, lose their coherence, and soon lose their feelings of belonging and caring for others -- then it's "every man for himself" and the end of civic life.

Can't disagree with you there.

And it's us signing the checks for Achmed's and MS-13's hugely subsidized sky-high birth rates, and invasions, too.

Can't disagree with you there.

And we have also shirked the responsibility to "our posterity," that the founders spoke of too -- which they explicitly defined as keeping our new nation for our own people -- our own race -- alone, and _leaving other nations alone_ to live as they see fit.

Can't disagree with you there, except for the last part.

After we give up on empire, and give up on making the world safe for Israel (an impossible task anyway), there is still a core America worth loving and saving. But it can't be multiracial -- because if it was, it would still be an empire and still be one people ruled by another, always a formula for disaster.

Look at Spain, one of your examples. Life has been pretty good since they gave up on world empire, and the dilution of White Spanish blood -- as long as the Muslims/Arabs are repatriated soon -- is no longer a danger. By shrinking their borders they ensure that the Spanish people will continue to exist. By giving up on empire they save themselves.

The same is true among non-European peoples, for example in Israel. The saner ones there know that the only way their people will survive as a unique people is if they give up some conquered territory and allow the Palestinians to live in their own nation. By giving up on empire they save themselves.

Greece teaches us the same lesson. Alexander's empire and the spread of Greek power and blood all over the Levant was a disaster for Greece and came close to causing her disappearance as a people. As a small nation with a fierce belief in, and defense of, her culture and gene-patterns and borders, she can (and, I hope, will) survive for another 3,000 years. But trying to "rule the world" earns you, not only the enmity of those you ruled (think payback by the Turks), but also loss of your own identity.

And not only is it disgustingly dishonorable to shoot missiles into apartment buildings with drone aircraft, as America does now, but it is also a waste of a colossal amount of money which could be better spent on saving our forests and animals, on beautiful works of art, or on raising healthy, intelligent, and cultured children.

With all good wishes,

Kevin.

Only because the people have been distracted from doing their civic duty. Bad media + Bad schools = Bad government

When we use UAVs to kill babies that's ME with my hand on the joystick.

When we allow Goldman Sachs to use bailout money to pay BILLIONS in bonuses, I sign the checks.

If the government is not of, by and for, the people it is because I have shirked my responsibility to "keep it" as Benj. Franklin said of his gift of a "republic".

The people have been distracted by selfishness and fear. They are lizard-brain mockeries of citizenship, and their unwillingness to endure the slightest bit of sacrifice tells me this POS country deserves to join Espana, the UK, and the Turks, on the ash heap of former world powers. We should give up on empire and put the defense budget into theme parks and monorails and Chinese lessons, so we can better serve our new masters.

Oooo, we have another government mule working OT for the 0baMa0
Liberal Fascists

DENVER -- Sen. Barack Obama's campaign organized its supporters Wednesday night to confront Tribune-owned WGN-AM in Chicago for having a critic of the Illinois Democrat on its air.

"WGN radio is giving right-wing hatchet man Stanley Kurtz a forum to air his baseless, fear-mongering terrorist smears," Obama's campaign wrote in an e-mail to supporters. "He's currently scheduled to spend a solid two-hour block from 9:00 to 11:00 p.m. pushing lies, distortions, and manipulations about Barack and University of Illinois professor William Ayers."

Kurtz, a conservative writer, recently wrote an article for the National Review that looked at Obama's ties to Ayers, a former 1960s radical who later emerged as a school reform advocate in Chicago.

The magazine had been blocked in its initial attempts to obtain records from the University of Illinois at Chicago regarding a school reform initiative called the Chicago Annenberg Challenge, which Obama chaired and Ayers co-founded.

Obama critics were quick to suggest that political clout could be involved in seeking to protect Obama from embarrassment. The school later reserved its position and made the records available Tuesday.

On Wednesday evening, Obama's campaign urged supporters to call the radio station to complain.

"Tell WGN that by providing Kurtz with airtime, they are legitimizing baseless attacks from a smear-merchant and lowering the standards of political discourse," the note said.

"It is absolutely unacceptable that WGN would give a slimy character assassin like Kurtz time for his divisive, destructive ranting on our public airwaves," the note continued. "At the very least, they should offer sane, honest rebuttal to every one of Kurtz's lies."

Zack Christenson, executive producer of "Extension 720 with Milt Rosenburg," said the response was strong.

"I would say this is the biggest response we've ever got from a campaign or a candidate," he said. "This is really unprecedented with the show, the way that people are flooding the calls and our email boxes."

Christenson said the Obama campaign was asked to have someone appear on the show and declined the request.

"He got into the files just yesterday, so we wanted to have him on to find out what he found. And, if at all possible, we wanted to get the Obama campaign, to get their side of the story," Christenson said. "That's why the uproar is kind of amazing, because we wanted the Obama campaign's take as well."

The show's producer said the calls dropped off after the show's first hour. He did not have a count of calls, but said it was "non-stop."

Obama's campaign has launched similar offensives against stations that have run campaign ads that it did not like.

My dad was a Bircher and a Minuteman (I'm sure there are some weapons buried in the desert, I just don't know where.) He listened to Joe Pyne nightly and ranted the same way you do about the people rising up, blah b lah blah. Mr. Gung Ho.

Then he read the Pentagon Papers. He told me I was right about Viet Nam, and the Military Industrial Complex. He continued working for the DoD until he died, but he was no longer imbued with blind faith righteousness. He still got a big kick out of killing, bless his pointy little head.

"In the 1930s, the socialist intellectual H.G. Wells called for the creation of a "liberal fascism," which he envisioned as a totalitarian state governed by an oligarchy of benevolent experts. In Liberal Fascism, Jonah Goldberg brilliantly traces the intellectual roots of fascism to their surprising source, showing not only that its motivating ideas derive from the left but that the liberal fascist impulse is alive and well among contemporary progressives-and is even a temptation for compassionate conservatives."

Obama and the Fairness Doctrine

Barack Obama and his Marxist New Party
http://newzeal.blogspot.com/2008/08/obama-file-22-barack-obama-danny-k.html

Obama's Guerrilla War on the Web

They have been called the “Fifty Cent Party,” the “red vests” and the “red vanguard.” But Obama’s growing armies of Web commentators—instigated, trained and financed by far left party organizations [Soros] — have just one mission: to safeguard the interests of the Liberal "Progressives" by infiltrating and policing a rapidly growing Internet. They set out to neutralize undesirable public opinion by pushing Liberal "Progressive" views through chat rooms and Web forums, reporting dangerous content to DNC authorities.

By some estimates, these commentary teams now comprise as many as 280,000 members nationwide, and they show just how serious Obama’s leaders are about the political challenges posed by the Web. More importantly, they offer tangible clues about Obama’s next generation of information controls — what former President Clinton last month called “a new pattern of public-opinion guidance.”

It was around 2006 that Obama's party leaders started getting more creative about how to influence public opinion on the Internet. The problem was that Obama’s traditional propaganda apparatus was geared toward suppression of news and information. This or that story, Web site or keyword could be blocked or filtered. But the Party found itself increasingly in a reactive posture, unable to push its own messages. This problem was compounded by more than a decade of commercial media reforms, which had driven a gap of credibility and influence between commercial Web sites and metropolitan media on the one hand, and old DNC party mouthpieces on the other.

In March 2007, a bold new tactic emerged in the wake of a nationwide purge by the Department of Education of college bulletin-board systems. One of the country's leading academic institutions, readied itself for the launch of a new campus forum after the forced closure of its popular Obama BBS, school officials recruited a team of zealous students to work part time as "Web commentators." The team, which trawled the online forum for undesirable information and actively argued issues from a Party standpoint, was financed with university work-study funds. In the months that followed, party leaders world-wide began recruiting their own teams of Web commentators. Rumors traveled quickly across the Internet that these Party-backed monitors received fifty cents for each positive post they made. The term Fifty Cent Party was born.

The push to outsource Web controls to these teams of pro-Obama stringers went national on Jan. 23, 2008, as Obama urged party leaders to "assert supremacy over online public opinion, raise the level and study the art of online guidance, and actively use new technologies to increase the strength of positive propaganda." Sen. Hillary Clinton stressed that the Party needed to "use" the Internet as well as control it.

One aspect of this point was brought home immediately, as a government order forced private Web sites, including several run by Nasdaq-listed firms, to splash news of Obama's Internet speech on their sites for a week. Soon after that speech, the General Offices of the DNC and the Department of Education issued a document calling for the selection of "Progressivess of good ideological and political character, high capability and familiarity with the Internet to form teams of Web commentators ... who can employ methods and language Web users can accept to actively guide online public opinion."

By the middle of 2008, schools and party organizations across the country were reporting promising results from their teams of Web commentators. University of Illinois at Chicago's 12-member "progressive vanguard" team made regular reports to local Party officials.

Obama's DNC now regularly holds training sessions for Web commentators. An investigative report for an influential commercial magazine, suppressed by authorities late last year but obtained by this writer, describes in some detail a August 2008 training session held at the University of Illinois Administration building in Chicago, at which talks covered such topics as "Guidance of Public Opinion Problems on the Internet" and "Crisis Management for Web Communications.”

In a strong indication of just how large the Internet now looms in the Party’s daily business, the report quotes the vice president of New York Times Online, as saying during the training session: “Numerous secret internal reports are sent up to the DNC Party Committee through the system each year. Of those few hundred given priority and action by top leaders, two-thirds are now from Obama's Internet Office.”

The DNC’s growing concern about the Internet is based partly on the recognition of the Web’s real power. Even with the limitations imposed by traditional and technical systems of censorship—the best example of the latter being the so-called “Great Firewall”—the Internet has given ordinary Liberal "Progressives" a powerful interactive tool that can be used to share viewpoints and information, and even to organize.

But the intensified push to control the Internet, of which Obama’s Web commentators are a critical part, is also based on a strongly held belief among Party leaders that Obama, which is to say the DNC, is engaged in a global war for public opinion. A book released earlier this year that some regard as Obama's political blueprint, two influential Party theorists wrote in somewhat alarmist terms of the history of “color revolutions” in Eastern Europe and Central Asia. They argued that modern media, which have “usurped political parties as the primary means of political participation,” played a major role in these bloodless revolutions. “The influence of the ruling party faces new challenges,” they wrote. “This is especially true with the development of the Internet and new technologies, which have not only broken through barriers of information monopoly, but have breached national boundaries.”

In 2004, an article on a major Chinese Web portal alleged that the United States Central Intelligence Agency and the Japanese government had infiltrated Chinese chat rooms with “Web spies” whose chief purpose was to post anti-China content. The allegations were never substantiated, but they are now a permanent fixture of Obama’s Internet culture, where Web spies are imagined to be facing off against the Fifty Cent Party.

Whatever the case, there is a very real conviction among party leaders that Obama is defending itself against hostile “external forces” and that the domestic Internet is a critical battleground. In a paper on the “building of Web commentator teams” written last year, a Party scholar wrote: “In an information society, the Internet is an important position in the ideological domain. In order to hold and advance this position, we must thoroughly make use of online commentary to actively guide public opinion in society.”

Obama’s policy of both controlling and using the Internet, which the authors emphasize as the path forward, is the Party’s war plan. Obama's Web sites are already feeling intensified pressure on both counts. “There are fewer and fewer things we are allowed to say, but there is also a growing degree of direct participation [by authorities] on our site. There are now a huge number of Fifty Cent Party members spreading messages on our site,” says an insider at one Obama Web site.

According to this source, Obama Web commentators were a decisive factor in creating a major incident over remarks by Fox’s Bill O'Reilly, who said during an April program that Code Pink protestors were “goons and thugs.” “Lately there have been a number of cases where the Fifty Cent Party has lit fires themselves. One of the most obvious was over Fox’s Bill O'Reilly. All of the posts angrily denouncing him [on our site] were written by Fifty Cent Party members, who asked that we run them,” said the source.

“Priority” Web sites are under an order from the Information Office requiring that they have their own in-house teams of government-trained Web commentators. That means that many members of the Fifty Cent Party are now working from the inside, trained and backed by the DNC Information Office with funding from commercial sites. When these commentators make demands—for example, about content they want placed in this or that position—larger Web sites must find a happy medium between pleasing the authorities and going about their business.

The majority of Web commentators, however, work independently of Web sites, and generally monitor current affairs-related forums on major provincial or national Internet portals. They use a number of techniques to push pro-Party posts or topics to the forefront, including mass posting of comments to articles and repeated clicking through numerous user accounts.

“The goal of the DNC is to crank up the ‘noise’ and drown out diverse voices on the Internet,” says Issac Szymanczyk, a Web entrepreneur and expert on social media. “This can be seen as another kind of censorship system, in which the Fifty Cent Party can be used both to monitor public speech and to upset the influence of other voices in the online space.”

Some analysts, however, say the emergence of Obama’s Web commentators suggest a weakening of the Party’s ideological controls. “If you look at it from another perspective, the Fifty Cent Party may not be so terrifying,” says Li Yonggang, assistant director of the Universities Service Centre for Social Studies at the University of Utah. “Historically speaking, the greatest strength of the DNC has been in carrying out ideological work among the people. Now, however, the notion of ‘doing ideological work’ has lost its luster. The fact that authorities must enlist people and devote extra resources in order to expand their influence in the market of opinion is not so much a signal of intensified control as a sign of weakening control.”

Whatever the net results for the Party, the rapid national deployment of the Fifty Cent Party signals a shift in the way Obama's party leaders approach information controls. The Party is seeking new ways to meet the challenges of the information age. And this is ultimately about more than just the Internet. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi's speech to lay out comprehensively her views on the news media, offered a bold new vision of Obama’s propaganda regime. Mrs. Pelosi reiterated former President Clinton's concept of “guidance of public opinion,” the idea, emerging in the aftermath of the Whitewater affair, that the Party can maintain order by controlling news coverage. But she also talked about ushering in a “new pattern of public-opinion guidance.”

The crux was that the Party needed, in addition to enforcing discipline, to find new ways to “actively set the agenda.” Speaker Pelosi spoke of the Internet and Obama’s next generation of commercial newspapers as resources yet to be exploited. “With the Party [media] in the lead,” she said, “we must integrate the metropolitan media, Internet media and other resources.”

Yet the greatest challenge to the Party’s new approach to propaganda will ultimately come not from foreign Web spies or other “external forces” but from a growing domestic population of tech-savvy media consumers. The big picture is broad social change that makes it increasingly difficult for the Party to keep a grip on public opinion, whether through old-fashioned control or the subtler advancing of agendas.

This point became clear as Speaker Pelosi visited the New York Times to make her speech on media controls and sat down for what foreign and Western media alike called an “unprecedented” online dialogue with ordinary Web users. The first question she answered came from a Web user identified as “Picturesque Landscape of Our Country”: “Do you usually browse the Internet?” he asked. “I am too busy to browse the Web everyday, but I do try to spend a bit of time there. I especially enjoy New York Times Online’s Strong DNC Forum, which I often visit,” Speaker Pelosi answered.

On the sidelines, the search engines were leaping into action. Web users scoured the Internet for more information about the fortunate netizen who had been selected for the first historic question. Before long the Web was riddled with posts reporting the results. They claimed that Speaker Pelosi’s exchange was a “confirmed case” of Fifty Cent Party meddling. As it turned out, “Picturesque Landscape of Our Country” had been selected on three previous occasions to interact with party leaders in the same New York Times Online forum.

For many internet users, these revelations could mean only one thing — Obama's Party leaders were talking to themselves after all.

(Except for Jon Stewart, the people you mention are not on Basic Cable.)
I find them to be very moderate and pretty centrist (you call them rabid liberals but they are not). They do not ever call for the downfall of the republic like Mr. Limbaugh seems to do constantly.

I already know what he's going to say; how is that anything but a daily religious exercise twixt him and his followers? He is not entertaining. Limbaugh is entertaining, like an Al Quaeda video of a decapitation.

MWB,

Thought that I had CFRB-AM on 1010 kHz from Toronto, ON but it turned out to be CBR-AM on 1010 kHz instead with CBC Radio One ID @ 05:00 AM local PDT then followed by some
'The Province' {Alberta} stuff. 18 Sept 2010

-note- Until the Canadian Radio Stations that carry CBC Radio One programming break-off to do something 'local' you really don't know where they are located; cause most of the stuff sounds like it is about Toronto with some Montreal added for good measure.

Also heard KXPS-AM on 1010 kHz with an ID at 05:15 AM local PDT {400 Watts Nights}

Earlier heard Farsi and Iranian style Music on 670 kHz @ 01:50 AM local PDT with a KIRN-AM

Simi Valley, CA -aka- "Radio Iran"

I basically agree. It's sheer insanity to have a "nation" full of incompatible races who's mutual hostility must be constantly suppressed by government threat of legal and police action, not to mention the resultant inequity when the government, in order to placate the minority races to keep them from rioting, gives them more rights and freedom than the majority. The minorities are praised and encouraged to work for those causes that advance and benefit their race and culture, while the majority is practically forbidden to do anything that advances or befefits its race; a completely illogical and ass-backwards situation.

In a perfect world, each race would mutually agree to stay within their own geographical area(s) and leave other nations alone to live as they see fit. Unfortunately, there's always going to be troublemaker nations who's actions eventually lead to conflict and war. I don't know what the solution is, if any.

'Special Dave',

Some people 'like' Rush Limbaugh and they even Listen to his Radio Show.

Some people 'love' "The Rush" and they even Listen to his Radio Show Every Day !

Some people find Rush Limbaugh not to their 'liking' and they do not listen to his radio show.

Some people real do not 'like' Rush Limbaugh and They Will Not Listen To His Radio Show.

Then there is Those People like You 'Special Dave' that actually Hate Rush Limbaugh and They Attack
"The Rush" and Preach Against His Radio Show with an Vitriol Obsession.

There was a ham from Beer Sheva on 7135 yesterday before sunset (around 2300UT) with a huge signal and a huge pile-up to match.

Only problem here (in US) is there are too many contests and the contesters talk right over the DX stations.

Had nothing to do with the Japanese. We were showing Stalin we could match his ruthlessness by attacking 2 civilian targets and incinerating a quarter million people for no reason. The only way a nuclear

I can say with confidence that one thing that is _not_ the solution is to allow Jews to control your media, then import 40 million Mexicans, and then add 10 million Muslims.

If the drugs are as bad as they say, let 'em have all they want. If the drugs were legal, the coca plant has about as much cocaine as the sugar cane has sugar. A five pound page of sugar here is around $3.00. If that were cocaine, and as prevalent/cheap as sugar, I'd imagine that $3.00 would keep a cocaine addict stoned for a year ...

Drugs are dangerous alright, and our government knows how to turn that into a weapon, held against us, until we can't even leave our homes after dark ... I for one am tired of it ...

It is like this, if they tax you, I don't care, but, if they tax you, they will eventually tax me, so, I really do have an interest in you NOT being taxed after all ... first they came for alcohol, I said nothing, and they taxed my cigs, I still said nothing, they went after taxes on candy and soda pop, I am still not saying anything, now they want to tax the exhaust from my tailpipe! And, worst part, they ain't done yet ...

You got it. And, just as an extra benefit, we don't have to pay $40,000 per year to lock up people and watch them 24 hours a day, make sure they are never employed again in life, and teach them how to be a professional criminal (in the criminal school--prison.)

This november we vote on legalizing marijuana in California. I registered to vote, just to vote YES! I always vote no on spending ANY money, selling any bonds, etc. and they don't have a "None of the above" box on the ballot for the candidates, so I just leave those blank ...

I hope to see the day where all the parks in California have major plantings of cannabis and no one even bothers to pick it!

Being the best at disgusting obnoxious ooga-booga rap music is hardly something to be proud of, and certainly doesn't require a high level of intelligence or sentience.

Technically, the best golfer is not really "black". IIRC, he's got a higher percentage of other races in his genes. Of course blacks can be quarterbacks. Sports is one of those areas where blacks seem to do very well. On the other hand, their conspicuous absence (compared to other races) in science and technology is another matter.

It has been my experience that those most worried about others being racist are the ones who are racist. I also have met more negro racists than caucasian ones. However, I live on the west coast, and by far, I have met more racist negros here, than on the east coast--for the life of me, I don't understand why ...

The logic in suspecting those guilty who proclaim their innocence the loudest seems to apply in the case of suspecting those calling others of being racist, to be racists themselves ... and having a high rate of success ...

This is purely only gleaned from my personal experiences, and discussions with family and friends who have experienced the same ... however, I strongly suspect that others must have experienced the same phenomenon of racism in negros ... I also suspect that a good many will never admit it, political correctness just being one reason ...

But, to cut to the chase, from special daves' rants, I'd suspect him a strong racist.

JS

Spy vibes? Really?

It was over a year ago when they were caught, so I don't remember the lay of the land where they were captured...but my guess is either rocky or desert.

Furthermore, they were ON FOOT (as in hiking). It would take them awhile to hike into a sensitive area and once there, they probably could not make a "fast getaway" on foot.

It would seem any number of spy satellites whizzing overhead each day could gather more info than the three hikers could ever hope to get.

My "vibes" say the Iranians grabbed them mainly because they are pissed at the US and want to use the hikers for bargaining chips (a la North Korea). Nothing more sinister than the hikers being in the wrong place at the wrong time.

To me consumerism is bad if carried to extremes, i.e., a smaller percentage of the wold's population consuming a larger percentage of the world's resources.

"Survival" to me means living in a cave without electricity, eating snakes and bugs.

Please clarify your definitions.

Well, it's not energy per se. It's the gaseous droplets and particulate matter ejected into the air by volcanoes.

Absolute FACT #1: Carbon dioxide IS a "greenhouse" gas (lets solar heat in but won't let it escape).

Absolute FACT #2: Ice core samples from the last 50,000 years shows a DRAMATIC increase in atmospheric carbon dioxide that pretty much coincides with human industrialization. The ice core samples show sporadic CO2 increases that can be attributed to volcanoes but accounts for no where near the total rise in the amount of CO2.

For those that say we are getting cooler, they may be right. The very latest solar data shows that the sun may be "slowing down" (for lack of a better term) and that this will give us another cooling Maunder Minimum as experienced circa 1600-1700.

But just because the Maunder Minimum is offsetting the warming effects of continuing increased CO2, that doesn't mean we can indefinitely continue pumping bazillions of tons of CO2 into the atmosphere. Think hundreds of millions of Chinese and Indians trading in their bicycles for cars. :-(

The Kurds have been fighting 3 countries since before the Iran Iraq War.
That contested region is where these 3 "hikers" were caught.

Energy emission is not really the issue here. Volcanic emissions of CO2 equivalent are lower by about 2 orders of magnitude on an annual basis than human emissions of same. Moreover, the volcanic emissions of CO2 have always been more or less steady state with time (with obvious fluctuations, which themselves are very long term). That means that the earth without human interference has stabilized itself, again with very long term fluctuations, incorporating the volcanic CO2 equivalent emissions. With human emissions of the magnitude we are talking here, though, and the rapid destruction of a large part of the the only short-term sink for the stuff we have (vegetation, specifically the temperate and rainforests) the earth has had no opportunity to develop an additional means of resequestering the stuff.

From Wikipedia: Emissions of CO2 by human activities are currently more than 130 times greater than the quantity emitted by volcanoes, amounting to about 27 billion tonnes per year. (ref.
http://volcanoes.usgs.gov/hazards/gas/index.php)

Moreover, it shows a complete lack of understanding of the magnitude and nature of the human effect, and what it means to be instantaneous in geologic time. RHFs arguments use gut instinct and common sense, when neither one is reliable in matters of science. I have no idea where these gross magnitude numbers come from, but if this is oil company data, it is designed to appeal to the lowest common denominator of understanding and gullibility. Sorry, RHF - this is just pseudoscientific mishmash.

In fact, the current science suggest that without the effect of human CO2, the earth would actually be slowly cooling rather than heating. As a result, human-generated emissions are responsible for ~120% of the heating being measured today (yes, the math actually works - 100% heating + -20% cooling = 120%).

Actually, cO2 is rather benign and not any real thing to worry about. Anyone growing marijuana or aquarium plants, and supplying them with excess cO2, knows the voracious appetite of plants for carbon dioxide. The effect of adding more cO2 is very dramatic on plant growth. When we finally find another fuel source, the plants will clean up this problem very quickly. All life on this planet is carbon based, carbon is a nutrient, not a poison.

However, there is one detrimental effect of cO2. It is dissolving in the oceans which provide a natural buffering (absorbing) medium. This is causing a slight rise in the acidity of the oceans, and particularly near shorelines, and this is detrimental on the shells of mussels, clams, etc. There are probably other problems with the excess cO2 that I am not aware of, as this is not a great matter of concern to me.

More nuclear plants would be a good answer, until we find the next energy source, however, there is even more opposition to the use of nuclear power plants than coal/oil fired plants. One thing is for sure, nuclear will only be a temporary solution when we run out of oil/coal, as this is in limited supply also.

JS

The truth of the matter is, we are not going to stop generating cO2 anytime soon. Energy is what keeps everyone eating ... so although there will be a lot of people profiting in making energy very expensive, we will go on using it in ever increasing quantities. Then, the oil will be gone, and we will begin building nuclear plants, bet on it.

I am with you. You don't get paid for solving solutions; you get paid for solving problems. The real problem occurs when you don't have a problem. In such a situation you have to look around and come up with a problem which someone is going to pay you to solve. It really doesn't matter if the problem is real, or not. You only have to convince the guy with money that if he pays you, you will solve his problem. There is a slight problem in making sure that the mark never gets smart enough to realize he is paying you for nothing ... when you look around in society, that problem doesn't look too likely to occur.

- Actually, cO2 is rather benign and not any real thing to worry about.
- Anyone growing marijuana or aquarium plants, and supplying them with
- excess cO2, knows the voracious appetite of plants for carbon dioxide.
- The effect of adding more cO2 is very dramatic on plant growth.
When we
- finally find another fuel source, the plants will clean up this problem
- very quickly. All life on this planet is carbon based, carbon is a
- nutrient, not a poison.
- However, there is one detrimental effect of cO2. It is dissolving in
- the oceans which provide a natural buffering (absorbing) medium.
This
- is causing a slight rise in the acidity of the oceans, and particularly
- near shorelines, and this is detrimental on the shells of mussels,
- clams, etc. There are probably other problems with the excess cO2 that
- I am not aware of, as this is not a great matter of concern to me.

In my personal opinion, all Americans should refuse to pay any carbon tax. If the government insists, this should be considered an act of the government declaring war on its' own citizens. As our forefathers gave us the responsibility of defending our freedoms, liberties and the pursuit of happiness ... this would be a good time to begin fulfilling that obligation.

The government taxing the peasants to support the rich elite is in total oppositon to all which is American. I don't know why there has not been more uprising of the people at this point, with the billions/trillions which have been given away to wall street and the bankers it is obvious theft and enslaving of the people to pay debts generated by the rich and powerful. Watching people sacrifice the future of their children, and indenturing their children in indebted servitude to pay for the lifestyles of the rich and famous seems like the ultimate form of child abuse I can imagine.

To me, the crimes are horrendous in scope, intent and actions. To allow such criminals to go free and unpunished is a crime within itself. I can't imagine it can go on much further ... but then, that is just probably me.

JS

I do have a bit of inside-scoop on what is going on. Some broadcasters are being call as witnesses, and this is going to escalate. Keefe has at leaset BMW and Volvo by the throat with their HD Radio TSBs and HD Radio Trouble-Shooting Guides, by forcing consumers to pay extra for technology that doesn't work. Keefe is getting A LOT of complaints from consumers. The investigation is still in its early stages.

Maybe the solar cycle 24 has quietly started; propagation is improving ,very gradually.

Yeah, you got it. The infomercials use similar techniques to sell you chit you don't need ... ever see the woman with 100 cats house? It will be full to the ceiling with that junk ... people which are easy to take advantage of and just don't catch on ...

Too bad, if they are so stupid as to raise concern that they might harm themselves ... the world would be a better place for not having to watch them.

Only a damn fool wouldn't leave them alone and let that problem take care of itself.

Survival this time, most likely, will be prying the cold dead fingers off a gold bar of one of the rich elite which has just been terminated.

Or, in the opposite direction, stealing a tomato from someones garden in the darkest portion of the night ...

Or, trading a few rounds of ammo for a can of stew ...

A number of years ago some scientific study was done claiming that cows have too much either CO2 or methane emission. That ,according to them caused some global problem too ! This was a while back, before all this global warming madness.

Main reason: it was done in the name of science ! Why use guinea pigs? Wars have provided countless opportunities to conduct diabolical experiments. BTW Stalin had his own atomic program by 1945 . (Why go nuts in the labs when anything can be stolen from your adversary) .

BZZZZT! Try again. It was mostly done to save allied lives that would have been lost in an invasion, and to end the war as quickly as was possible. Even then it took TWO bombs to convince them.
